Headnote

The article analyses the general regime of the principle of conformity, exposing the requirements for goods to be deemed in conformity with the contract. It also sets out the regime of the legal and commercial guarantee, analysing how these rules must be read together with the civil code and its relevant provisions (applicable to civil contracts).

This piece of doctrine is a summary of the rules contained in Directive 1999/44 and the innovations therein introduced to our legal system, dealing with legal issues such as reimbursement of the price due to the use given to the goods or to the enjoyment of the service.
