Headnote

The author examines in depth three ways one party of a contract can save itself from the obligation arising from a (valid) contract. These three methods are termination, cancellation and withdrawal from a contract, withdrawal being the method of the Directives 85/577/EEC and 97/7/EC. He compares the European provisions with the provisions of the Yugoslavian Obligations Act of 1978 and the provisions of the Slovenian Consumer Protection Act and presents the legal consequences of a withdrawal in Slovenian legislation in depth at the time.
