

Member State law

Each Member State of the European Union (EU) has its own law and legal system. Member State (MS) law can comprise both law at the national level (or national law, which is valid anywhere in a certain Member State) and laws which are only applicable in a certain area, region, or city.

Member States publish their law in their official language(s) and it is only legally binding in this/these language(s). For information purposes, certain acts of Member State law may also be available in one or more languages other than its official language(s).

Databases

Most Member States have a national database of their law - you can obtain this information by choosing one of the flags listed on the right side.

In addition, the European N-Lex database links most of the official national databases. N-Lex is an ongoing common project managed by the European Publications Office and participating national governments. Currently, it enables you to view the law of 28 Member States.

Furthermore, via the European Forum of Official Gazettes, you can access the websites of the organisations responsible for publishing the official gazettes of EU Member States (plus some EU candidate countries and the EFTA countries).

From the EU perspective, many laws of the Member States actually implement EU law. In particular, this is the case for national law implementing EU directives. If you are looking for such implementing measures, by which the Member States have incorporated certain provisions of EU law, then you can use the relevant search function at the EUR-Lex database.

Sources of law

Member States' law derives from various sources, in particular the constitution, the statutes or legislation (which can be adopted at national, regional or local level), and/or regulations by government agencies, etc. Furthermore, judicial decisions by Member State courts can develop into case law.

Areas of law

Traditionally, the law of the Member States is divided into private and public law.

- Private law or civil law is the area of law in a society that affects the relationships between individuals or groups without the intervention of the state or government.
- Public law governs the relationship between individuals and the state, its entities and authorities, the powers of the latter and the relevant procedures. Generally speaking, public law comprises constitutional law, administrative law and criminal law. Because of the particular nature of criminal law, it can also be regarded as a category in its own right.

To obtain detailed information on Member State law please select one of the flags listed on the right hand side.

This page is maintained by the European Commission. The information on this page does not necessarily reflect the official position of the European Commission. The Commission accepts no responsibility or liability whatsoever with regard to any information or data contained or referred to in this document. Please refer to the legal notice with regard to copyright rules for European pages.

Last update: 15/04/2019

Member State law - Belgium

This section presents an overview of the various sources of law in Belgium.

---

1. What legal instruments or 'sources of law' set out the rules of law?

The law is a set of hard legal rules, written or otherwise, which govern social relations between citizens and the authorities and among citizens and also organise public administration.

A distinction is made between formal and material sources. Unlike formal sources, material sources do not contain actual rules of law. Examples of material sources include good faith, equity and reasonable conduct.

There are five categories of material sources. Three of these are mandatory – legislation, customary law and the general principles of law. The other two are merely 'persuasive' – case-law and academic writings.

Legislation is considered in greater detail in points 3 and 5 below. Legislation is defined as the written rules enacted by an authority. Customary law is defined as unwritten law operating on the customs and usage of people in general and traders in particular. The general principles of law express the higher values which a particular society wishes to respect, such as the equality of all citizens, the proportionality of rules and measures taken and the principle that authorities must act in accordance with the law. Many of these principles are set out in so-called legal maxims, such as 'non bis in idem' in criminal law and the principle that 'lex posterior derogat legi priori'.

Case-law and academic writings are persuasive sources of law. Case-law consists of the entire body of judgments issued by courts. A judgment is binding only on the parties to the case; there is no system of legal precedents in Belgium. The only judgments which are universally binding are those issued by the Constitutional Court (Cour constitutionnelle). The other high courts are the Council of State (Conseil d'Etat) (the highest administrative court) and the Court of Cassation (Cour de cassation) (the highest court dealing with ordinary law).

Another significant source is international law, consisting in particular of the Treaty on European Union, EU Regulations and Directives and the European Convention on Human Rights. In addition, there are many conventions concluded within the framework of international institutions such as the United Nations or the Council of Europe (multilateral conventions) or between Belgium and another state (bilateral conventions). This source of law has become very large in recent decades and continues to grow. Many provisions contained in these instruments directly influence our everyday lives.

The sites Législation belge (in French) or Belgische Wetgeving (in Dutch) provide access to a database of consolidated Belgian legislation. A search and indexing engine may be used to search for any normative text still in force and published in the Moniteur Belge since 1830. However, administrative and fiscal normative texts published before 1994 are not yet completely covered.

2. What is the legal status of the general principles of law, customary law and caselaw?

See question 1.

3. What is the hierarchy of these legal instruments?

Persons residing in Belgium are subject to various categories of legal rules. They are subject not only to rules issued by the Belgian federal authorities, but also to those issued by lower entities such as the provinces and local districts<sup>(1)</sup>. Belgium is also a member of various international and supranational organisations such as the United Nations, the European Union, the Council of Europe and NATO. Rules issued by these organisations also apply to the Belgian authorities and population.

Not all law-making authorities have strictly demarcated areas of jurisdiction and not all categories of rules have the same status, so conflicts can arise. Consequently, there is a hierarchy of norms, the principle being that lower-level norms should never conflict with higher-level ones.

The Constitution is the highest-ranking norm for Belgian internal law. It governs the separation of powers and the way in which these powers are exercised. The Constitution also sets out the fundamental values of society and the fundamental rights of citizens. In a judgment given on 27 May 1971, the Court of Cassation held that all international and supranational instruments take precedence over national instruments, including the Constitution. If an EU Regulation conflicted with the Constitution, the Regulation would prevail.

Below the Constitution, in descending order, there are:

1. special acts (lois spéciales) (acts passed by special majority which determine the division of powers and the key operational rules of public institutions);

2. acts (lois), decrees (décrets) and ordinances (ordonnances);
3. royal orders (arrêtés royaux) and government orders (arrêtés de gouvernement) implementing acts or decrees; and
4. ministerial orders (arrêtés ministériels).

4. How do rules in supranational instruments enter into force nationally?

EU Regulations are directly applicable and the Belgian legislature is not directly involved in their implementation. But internal legislation is needed to approve and ratify international treaties. In certain areas, all legislative bodies in Belgium must approve and ratify treaties, which can be a cumbersome and time-consuming process. The domestic legislatures are also involved in implementing EU Directives, for these always require internal legislation.

5. Which authorities will be expected to adopt legal rules?

Three separate constitutional powers form the Belgian federal State: the legislature, the executive and the judiciary. The legislature draws up acts, the executive implements them and the judiciary resolves disputes arising from application of the acts.

Federal legislative power

A initiative for federal legislation may come from one or more Members of the House of Representatives, one or more Members of the Senate or the King (in practice his Ministers or Secretaries of State). These are the three components of the legislative authority in Belgium.

An act may be based on a proposal for an act (proposition de loi), moved by a Member of the House or the Senate, or a draft act (projet de loi), moved by the King (Ministers are authorised by the King to move draft acts). Proposals for acts and draft acts have equal weight.

Instruments to implement federal legislation are prepared by the executive authority, headed by the King. Powers may be delegated to a Minister – hence the distinction between royal and ministerial orders.

Communities, regions, provinces and municipalities

Belgium is a federal state consisting of communities (communautés) and regions (régions). These, in turn, are at the root of law within the powers allocated to them under the Constitution and by certain special laws.

The powers of the communities concern in particular culture and education, while the powers of the regions cover economic policy and environmental protection. In order to exercise these powers, each community and region has a parliament. The communities and regions may draw up acts, called decrees (ordinances in the Brussels-Capital Region). Along with Members of Parliament, community and regional governments belong to the legislature at EU, regional or community level (legislative initiative). These governments must also enforce all enacted decrees and ordinances.

Belgium is also divided into provinces and municipalities. At the corresponding levels, provincial and municipal councils (conseils) also enact regulations and ordinances in the fields for which they are responsible, such as public safety, waste collection, culture and provincial and municipal education. The provincial executive (collège provincial) and municipal executive (collège communal) implement these regulations (as well as higher norms such as acts, decrees, ordinances and orders, within the limits of their powers).

Two of the three powers are present at these levels: legislative power, exercised by the community and regional parliaments and the provincial and municipal councils; and executive power, exercised by the community and regional governments and the provincial and municipal executives. Judicial power is not divided in this way. Organisation of the courts is solely a federal responsibility.

6. What is the procedure for adopting these legal rules?

See question 5.

At federal level, the House of Representatives and, if appropriate, the Senate, vote on draft acts or proposals for acts, after possible consideration by the Council of State. They are then transmitted to the King, who gives his assent and promulgates them once they have been countersigned by the relevant minister.

7. How do rules of national origin enter into force?

Federal legislation comes into existence when enacted and promulgated by the King. As a rule, legislation enters into force ten days after publication in the Belgian State Gazette, unless otherwise specified<sup>(2)</sup>.

Legislation of a federal unit of the state – decrees and ordinances – is brought into force and published by the government of that federal unit. It enters into force ten days after being published in the Moniteur Belge, unless otherwise specified.

8. How are conflicts between different legal rules resolved within the Member State?

Conflicts between properly enacted legal instruments may be resolved in a number of ways. The hierarchy of norms allows most conflicts to be avoided, but if conflicts do arise they must be resolved.

Under Article 142 of the Constitution, the Constitutional Court has sole jurisdiction to review legislation for compatibility with the rules governing the powers of the State, the communities and the regions. These rules are laid down in the Constitution and in the legislation on institutional reform in the federal state of Belgium.

The Constitutional Court is also empowered to rule in cases where it is alleged that legislation violates the fundamental rights and freedoms secured by Title II (Articles 8-32) of the Constitution. These include the principle of equality (Article 10) and the ban on discrimination (Article 11). The Constitutional Court may also review legislation for compatibility with Article 170 (legality in tax law), Article 172 (equality in tax law) and Article 191 (protection for foreign nationals) of the Constitution.

See also Service public fédéral Justice and the special Act of 6 January 1989 on the Constitutional Court – 'législation consolidée'.

The Council of State<sup>(3)</sup>, acting under Article 160 of the Constitution, settles all conflicts between implementing instruments (orders and regulations) and legislative instruments. There is also a Parliamentary Review Committee, which looks into conflicts of interest.

-----
(1) Cf. Service public fédéral Justice (<https://justitie.belgium.be>), 'Législation consolidée', the 1994 Constitution and the special Act of 8 August 1980 on institutional reform, as well as the federal portal website, under 'La Belgique'.

The Flemish Community with the Flemish Council (also known as the Flemish Parliament)

The French Community with the Council of the French Community

The German-speaking Community with the Council of the German-speaking Community

The Flemish Region with the same Flemish Council

The Walloon Region with the Council of the Walloon Region

The Brussels-Capital Region with the Council of the Brussels-Capital Region (for certain matters organised as the Flemish and French Committees for Community Affairs)

The communities have powers over:

1. cultural affairs;
2. education, except [...];
3. cooperation between the communities and international cooperation, including powers to conclude treaties on matters under points 1 and 2.

The Councils of the Flemish and French Communities each enact decrees applicable to their own territory on various matters relating to cooperation between the communities and to international cooperation, including powers to conclude treaties. The Council of the German-speaking Community has similar powers.

The Regional Councils have powers in matters relating to land planning, monuments and rural management, the economy, agriculture, etc.

(2) See Service public fédéral Justice, 'Législation consolidée', Act of 31 May 1961 on the use of languages in legislation and the drafting, publication and entry into force of legislation and regulations.

(3) See Service public fédéral Justice, 'Législation consolidée', consolidated acts of 12 January 1973 on the Council of State.

The national language version of this page is maintained by the respective Member State. The translations have been done by the European Commission service. Possible changes introduced in the original by the competent national authority may not be yet reflected in the translations. The European Commission accepts no responsibility or liability whatsoever with regard to any information or data contained or referred to in this document. Please refer to the legal notice to see copyright rules for the Member State responsible for this page.

Last update: 18/07/2017

Member State law - Bulgaria

Please note that the original language version of this page bg has been amended recently. The language version you are now viewing is currently being prepared by our translators.

This page offers you information on the Bulgarian legal system and an overview of Bulgarian law.

Sources of law

National sources of law

Sources of law include

- The Constitution of the Republic of Bulgaria (Prom. SG 56/13 Jul 1991, amend. SG 85/26 Sep 2003, SG 18/25 Feb 2005, SG 27/31 Mar 2006, SG 78/26 Sep 2006 - Constitutional Court Judgement No.7/2006, SG 12/6 Feb 2007),
- Legislative acts and
- Regulations.

Case law is not a formal source of law, but it has persuasive authority.

European and international sources of law

One of the principal sources of law in Bulgaria is European Union law.

International treaties negotiated between Bulgaria and third states form part of the domestic legal order.

International treaties that have been ratified in accordance with constitutional procedure, promulgated and come into force in Bulgaria become part of the legislation of the state. Such law has primacy over any conflicting provision in the domestic legislation.

All legislative Acts must be promulgated and come into force three days after the date of their publication, unless otherwise envisaged in the Acts themselves.

Types of legal instruments – description

Written instruments include the Constitution of the Republic of Bulgaria, international treaties, legislative instruments and regulations (decrees, regulations, ordinances, rules, instructions and orders).

The Constitution of the Republic of Bulgaria is the highest-ranking norm. It establishes the organisation, principles, powers and duties of state institutions, as well as the rights and duties of citizens.

A law is a normative act that governs or interprets (based on the Constitution) social relations susceptible to durable regulation, according to subject matter or the subjects of one or more legal institutes or their subdivisions. For further details please refer to article 3 of the Law on Normative Acts of the Republic of Bulgaria.

All legislative Acts must be promulgated and come into force three days after the date of their publication, unless otherwise envisaged in the Acts themselves.

The Council of Ministers issues a decree when it approves regulations, ordinances or instructions, and when it issues regulations to provide for social arrangements not regulated in the sphere of its executive and ordering activity. For further details please refer to article 6 of the Law on Normative Acts of the Republic of Bulgaria.

A regulation is a normative act issued to implement a law in its entirety. It provides for the organisation of state and local bodies or for the internal order of their activities.

An ordinance is a normative act issued to implement certain provisions or other sections of a normative act of higher power.

An instruction is a normative act, whereby a higher body instructs subordinate bodies on the implementation of a normative Act, or whose fulfilment it must ensure.

Other sources that are not written down, such as customs and general principles of law, are important as well.

The interpretative decisions of the supreme courts can be regarded as a subsidiary source of law.

Rulings of the Constitutional Court must be promulgated in the state gazette within 15 days of the date on which they are issued. A ruling must come into force three days after its promulgation. Any Act found to be unconstitutional will cease to apply on the date such a ruling comes into force. Any portion of a law that is not ruled as unconstitutional will remain in force.

Hierarchy of norms

The Constitution of the Republic of Bulgaria is the supreme law. The supremacy of EU law is not specifically established in the Constitution, but is considered superior to national law.

According to Article 5 (4) of the Constitution, international treaties that have been ratified in accordance with the constitutional procedure, promulgated and come into force in the Republic of Bulgaria, become part of the legislation of the state. They have primacy over any conflicting provision of the domestic legislation.

At the next level are the legislative instruments.

The executive power has the right to enact regulations, such as decrees, ordinances, resolutions, rules, regulations, instructions and orders.

Institutional framework

Institutions responsible for the adoption of legal rules

The National Assembly is vested with the legislative authority. It can pass, amend, supplement and repeal laws.

In order to implement laws, the Council of Ministers adopts decrees, ordinances and resolutions. The Ministers issue rules, regulations, instructions and orders.

As regards international instruments, the Council of Ministers concludes international treaties when authorised to do so by law. The National Assembly ratifies (or rejects) international treaties that:

- Are of a political or military nature
- Concern the Republic of Bulgaria's participation in international organisations
- Envisage corrections to the borders of the Republic of Bulgaria
- Contain obligations for the Treasury
- Envisage the state's participation in international arbitration or legal proceedings
- Concern fundamental human rights
- Affect the action of the law or require new legislation in order to be enforced
- Expressly require ratification
- Confer to the European Union powers ensuing from the Constitution

Decision - making process

Adoption of the Constitution

A Grand National Assembly, consisting of 400 members, adopts a new Constitution if necessary.

For further details, please refer to article 158, paragraph 1 of the Constitution of the Republic of Bulgaria.

The National Assembly is free to amend all provisions of the Constitution except those that fall under the prerogative of the Grand National Assembly. A constitutional amendment requires a majority of three-quarters of the votes of all members of the National Assembly in three ballots on three different days. An amendment to the Constitution is signed and promulgated in the state gazette by the chairperson of the Grand National Assembly within seven days of being passed.

Legislative decision-making process

According to Article 87 of the Constitution, any member of the National Assembly or the Council of Ministers has the right to introduce a Bill.

A Bill is adopted by the National Assembly in two readings. During the first reading, the Bill is debated in its entirety. MPs may submit written motions to amend a Bill that has been adopted at first reading within the term specified by the National Assembly. The National Assembly debates the Bill in detail and adopts it at the second reading. The adopted Bill is sent to the President of the Republic of Bulgaria who signs a decree for its promulgation. The Act is promulgated in the state gazette and comes into force after three days, unless another term is specified in the Act.

Legal databases

The state gazette is available free of charge on the State Gazette website. The online edition contains Bills promulgated by the National Assembly, decrees by the Council of Ministers, international treaties, other legal acts, as well as all public procurement and concession notices.

Commercial legal databases such as Apis, Ciela and the Juridical Encyclopaedia offer a full range of legal information, but are not free of charge.

---

The national language version of this page is maintained by the respective Member State. The translations have been done by the European Commission service. Possible changes introduced in the original by the competent national authority may not be yet reflected in the translations. The European Commission accepts no responsibility or liability whatsoever with regard to any information or data contained or referred to in this document. Please refer to the legal notice to see copyright rules for the Member State responsible for this page.

Last update: 17/12/2018

Member State law - Czech Republic

This page gives you information on the legal system and an overview of the law of the Czech Republic.

---

Sources of law

Czech law, which forms part of continental European legal culture, is founded on written law and includes acts and other legislative instruments, promulgated international treaties ratified by the Czech Parliament [Parlament ČR], and rulings of the Constitutional Court [Ústavní soud] annulling all or part of a legislative provision.

Types of legal instrument – description

The legal order of the Czech Republic is made up of all Czech legislation and related instruments.

The most important legislative instruments are acts [zákony], i.e. collections of rules of behaviour governing the main areas in the lives of individuals and society. More comprehensive acts known as codes [zákoníky] govern a whole area of law and set out the detailed provisions in a systematic way. Acts encompassing a whole area of procedural law and setting out detailed procedural provisions are called rules of procedure (řády). Acts on the most important matters of state and on citizens' and human rights (including the Constitution of the Czech Republic and the Charter of Fundamental Rights and Freedoms) are known as constitutional acts [ústavní zákony] and there is a special procedure for their adoption.

The acts are underpinned by implementing regulations: government regulations, decrees from ministries or central-government bodies, and decrees from autonomous regional entities.

Czech law also includes international agreements that have been ratified by Parliament and are thus binding on the Czech Republic. International agreements take priority over other legislation to the extent that an international agreement takes precedence over national law if the two differ on a given point.

Besides the types of legislation referred to above, European law has also applied in the Czech Republic, in the same way as in other Member States, since its accession to the European Union.

Custom is not a source of law in the Czech Republic. In some cases, however, the law allows custom to be taken into account in the context of certain fields or legal principles. Where this is the case, it is specified by the law in question and the courts can enforce those provisions. The prevalent view therefore is that the legal source is not the legal principle or the custom itself, but the law which refers to it.

A court judgment is not a source of law either. On the other hand, a court cannot refuse to take a decision because the law is incomplete or ambiguous. Often it must give its own interpretation of the matter, on which other courts will then, to a large extent, base their judgments, making this a de facto legal precedent. If the judgment is published in the Sbírka soudních rozhodnutí a stanovisek (Collection of Court Judgments and Opinions), where fundamental decisions of higher courts are generally published, it is in fact considered a source of law, even though it is not officially regarded as such.

The hierarchy of sources of law

The legal order of the Czech Republic is hierarchically structured. At the top are the Constitution and the other constitutional acts; these carry the greatest legal authority and can be amended only by another constitutional act. Below these come ordinary acts, the basis for implementing regulations, which carry the least legal weight. Provisions of lesser legal weight must comply with those which are higher in the legal hierarchy. Legislation may be repealed or amended only by provisions of the same or greater legal weight. International agreements have special standing. As indicated above, they are part of the legal order and take precedence even over a constitutional act in the event of a conflict.

Legislation derived from acts – government regulations, decisions of the President of the Republic of a generally normative nature (such as those on amnesty), legislative provisions of ministries and other central and local government authorities, delegated decrees of regional and municipal authorities. Such provisions must be issued on the basis and within the limits of an act, within the scope of lawful authority.

As regards European law, the EU principle of the supremacy of Community law applies just as in the other Member States. Under this principle, European legislation takes precedence when there is a conflict between European law and the national law of a Member State (acts, decrees etc.). This applies equally where there is a conflict between national law and primary Community legislation (the Treaties) and between national law and secondary Community legislation (regulations, directives etc.). Under the prevailing interpretation of the law, not even the supreme national legal instruments are exempt - European law even takes precedence over the constitutions and constitutional acts of Member States.

For international agreements, which are binding on the Czech Republic, to become part of its law, Parliament must ratify them, provided that no constitutional act requires the agreement concerned to be ratified by referendum. The President of the Republic ratifies international agreements. After ratification, the Czech version of the agreement must be published in the Sbírka mezinárodních smluv (Collection of International Agreements).

Institutional framework

Institutions responsible for adopting legislation

The legislative power of the Czech Republic is vested in its Parliament, which comprises two chambers:

- the Chamber of Deputies (200 deputies) and
- the Senate (81 senators).

The legislative process

The law-making or legislative process starts with the right of initiative. Individual members of Parliament or groups of members, the Senate, the government, and the regional authorities have the right to propose new acts and amendments to existing acts. Only the government may propose acts concerning the state budget or closure of the national accounts; only the Chamber of Deputies may decide on such acts. The government, however, has the right to express its opinion on any draft act (bill). The Chamber of Deputies first discusses and if necessary amends the draft in three successive readings.

Approval of the act requires a simple majority of the deputies present. The President of the Chamber of Deputies then sends the approved draft to the Senate as soon as possible and the Senate has just 30 days to discuss it — in contrast to the often long-drawn-out discussions in the Chamber of Deputies, which sometimes last for months. By the end of that time, the Senate must approve or reject the draft or return an amended version of it to the Chamber of Deputies. It can also decide not to discuss the act at all. If the Senate approves the draft, decides not to discuss it, or expresses no opinion by the deadline, the act is deemed to be adopted and is sent to the President of the Republic for signature. If the Senate rejects the draft, the Chamber of Deputies votes on it once again. The act is adopted if approved by a simple majority in the Chamber of Deputies. If the Senate sends an amended draft back to the Chamber of Deputies, the lower house votes on the version approved by the Senate. The draft act is adopted by a simple majority of the deputies. If the Chamber of Deputies does not approve the Senate's amended draft, it votes again on the original version of the draft sent to the Senate. The act is adopted if approved by a simple majority of all deputies (i.e. at least 101 votes). Electoral acts and certain other types of act must be approved by both the Chamber of Deputies and the Senate.

The President of the Republic may decide not to sign an approved draft within 15 days of it being sent to him, and may return it to the Chamber of Deputies for further discussion, stating his reasons. This is known as a presidential veto. The Chamber of Deputies can overturn the presidential veto by a simple majority of its members without any amendments to the draft, in which case the act is passed. Otherwise it is not adopted.

Besides the President of the Republic, the President of the Chamber of Deputies and the Prime Minister also sign acts, though this is just a formality.

When the Chamber of Deputies is dissolved, the Senate may adopt legislation in certain areas requiring immediate action which would otherwise require the adoption of an act. The government can propose measures to the Senate and these must be approved by the Chamber of Deputies at its first meeting, otherwise they lapse.

The exceptions in this legislative process are constitutional acts. For these acts to be adopted, they must be approved by a three-fifths majority of all deputies (a qualified majority) and a three-fifths majority of senators present, rather than by a simple majority (half) of all the Members of Parliament present, as required for ordinary acts. Constitutional acts can be amended or extended only by means of other constitutional acts (i.e. when the Chamber of Deputies is dissolved, they cannot be changed by Senate legislation) and the President cannot veto them.

Ministries, other administrative agencies and self-governing regional bodies may issue detailed implementing rules (regulations and decrees) within the limits of their competence.

Validity of legislation

For a piece of legislation to enter into force, it has to be published. Constitutional acts, acts and other legislative provisions (government regulations, ministerial decrees etc.) are published in the Sbírka zákonů (Collection of Acts) issued by the Ministry of the Interior. Legislation enters into force and becomes part of Czech law on the day on which it is published in the Sbírka zákonů. The Collection also records the date on which each piece of legislation takes effect. This is the date from which everyone is obliged to comply with the legislation in question. If no later date is stipulated, the legislation takes effect fifteen days after publication. In cases of overriding public interest, the date of entry into effect may be brought forward, but may not precede the date of publication. Thus, the date on which a piece of legislation takes effect may be the same as the date of its entry into force, but it may never take effect before it enters into force. Legislation adopted by the Senate is published in the Sbírka zákonů in the same way as acts; ratified international agreements are published in the Sbírka mezinárodních smluv (Collection of International Agreements). Regional legislation is published in official gazettes; municipal legislation is displayed on the official council noticeboard for 15 days and then by whatever means is standard in that locality.

Where acts or their individual provisions conflict with the constitutional order or where other legal instruments or their individual provisions conflict with the constitutional order or with an act, the Constitutional Court decides whether they should be repealed.

For more information, see the text of the Constitution: Ústava.

Legal database

The legal database is owned and maintained by the Ministry of the Interior of the Czech Republic. It contains the following information:

- a section of the official website of the Ministry of the Interior (Ministerstvo vnitra) dedicated to the legislature (legislativa). It contains electronic (PDF) copies of the Collection of Acts (Sbírka zákonů) and the Collection of International Agreements (Sbírka mezinárodních smluv) (part of the official gazette). The site has no official status or legal force. Only the printed text of the Collection of Acts is authentic. The site can be accessed by the public, and you can conduct full-text document and metadata searches for the information you need.
- The Acts section (Sekce zákony) of the Czech government portal (Portál veřejné správy České republiky) contains the full, up-to-date texts of acts and implementing regulations. This website has no official status or legal force. You can conduct full-text searches and searches by name and number of the documents in the database.
- The ISAP information system gives access to the databases used to allocate coordination roles to Council documents and to legislative acts published in the EU Official Journal. It also monitors the implementation process, the national legislative process and infringement procedures. The database provides an electronic archive of national positions, working papers, correlation tables and so on.

Case law

In the Czech Republic there is no single official or private collection that systematically publishes the fundamental judgments of all Czech courts, i.e. those of the Constitutional Court and the general courts that may have general implications. The findings of the Constitutional Court are published in the Sbírka nálezů a usnesení Ústavního soudu (Collection of Rulings and Resolutions of the Constitutional Court), published by C. H. Beck in Prague. Where the judgments of general courts are concerned, only selected findings of the supreme courts, i.e. the Supreme Court and the Supreme Administrative Court, are systematically published. The selected judgments of the Supreme Court and also its opinions, whose purpose is to consolidate the case law of the lower civil and criminal courts of the ordinary judiciary, are printed in the Sbírka soudních rozhodnutí a stanovisek (Collection of Court Judgments and Opinions), published by LexisNexis in Prague. Selected judgments and resolutions of the Supreme Administrative Court are published in the Sbírka rozhodnutí Nejvyššího správního soudu (Collection of Judgments of the Supreme Administrative Court), published by ASPI in Prague. The case law of the lower general courts is not systematically published; selected judgments are sometimes published in legal periodicals.

Official electronic search engines for the case law of the Constitutional Court and both supreme general courts are of practical importance here, covering the judgments of those courts in their entirety. These initiate electronic searches of the servers of the various lower general courts in order to display selections from their case law.

judikatura Ústavního soudu ČR (Constitutional Court case law)

judikatura Nejvyššího soudu ČR (Supreme Court case law)

judikatura Nejvyššího správního soudu (Supreme Administrative Court case law)

Is access to the database free of charge?

Access to the database is free of charge.

Selected commercial databases:

ASPI

LEXDATA

LEXGALAXY

SAGIT

TORI

---

The national language version of this page is maintained by the respective Member State. The translations have been done by the European Commission service. Possible changes introduced in the original by the competent national authority may not be yet reflected in the translations. The European Commission accepts no responsibility or liability whatsoever with regard to any information or data contained or referred to in this document. Please refer to the legal notice to see copyright rules for the Member State responsible for this page.

Last update: 06/10/2016

Member State law - Denmark

This page provides you with information on the legal system in Denmark.

For information on the Danish legal system please consult the website of the Danish Ministry of Justice and the Danish Parliament.

---

Legal databases

The legal information portal (Retsinformation) is the site that gives citizens access to:

- Laws, administrative regulations, treaties, consolidated law
- Parliamentary documents
- Administrative decisions
- Decisions of the Ombudsman

The legal information portal contains all legislation in force on 1st January 1985 and all legislation introduced after that date.

Access to the database is free of charge.

---

The national language version of this page is maintained by the respective Member State. The translations have been done by the European Commission service. Possible changes introduced in the original by the competent national authority may not be yet reflected in the translations. The European Commission accepts no responsibility or liability whatsoever with regard to any information or data contained or referred to in this document. Please refer to the legal notice to see copyright rules for the Member State responsible for this page.

Last update: 19/12/2017

Member State law - Germany

The language version you are now viewing is currently being prepared by our translators. Please note that the following languages: de have already been translated.

---

This page provides you with information on the legal system in Germany.

The Federal Republic of Germany is a democratic, federal and social constitutional state. Together with the basic rights, the principles of a democratic, federal and social constitutional state form the inviolable core of the German constitution, adherence to which is safeguarded by the Federal Constitutional Court.

Sources of law

The basis of all sources of law is the German constitution: the Basic Law for the Federal Republic of Germany (Basic Law - Grundgesetz), which:

- Lays down the fundamental structure and essential structural principles of the state and its highest organs
- Defines the principles by which elections to the Bundestag (the German Federal Parliament) are conducted
- Provides the basis for the status and rights of the freely elected members of the Bundestag
- Outlines how the Bundestag is organised and conducts its business.

Types of legal instruments - description

The main written sources of German domestic law are the Basic Law, legislation, statutory instruments and bylaws. In addition, there are unwritten sources of law, including the general principles enshrined in international law, customary law and case law (especially decisions of the Federal Constitutional Court).

Germany is a federal state made up of 16 constituent states – the Länder. Accordingly, there are federal laws which apply throughout the whole territory of the Federation, and Land laws that only have validity in the Land in question. Each Land has its own constitution and, within the legal framework set by the Basic Law, also has the power to adopt legislation as well as statutory instruments and bylaws.

The legislative competencies of the Federation and the Länder are regulated in detail by the Basic Law. Articles 71 to 74 list the legislative powers of the Federation. In all other cases, the Länder are responsible.

Exclusive legislative power of the Federation

In fields subject to the exclusive legislative power of the Federation, the Länder only have the power to adopt legislation where they are expressly empowered to do so by a federal law (Article 71 of the Basic Law).

According to Article 73 of the Basic Law the Federation holds exclusive legislative power in the following fields (inter alia): all foreign policy issues, defence (including the protection of the civil population), citizenship, freedom of movement, passports, residency registration and identity cards, immigration, emigration and extradition, currency and money, the unity of the customs and trading area, air transport, cooperation between the Federation and the Länder concerning criminal police work, and the law on weapons and explosives.

Concurrent legislative powers

In fields subject to concurrent legislation, the Länder have the right to adopt legislation provided and to the extent that the Federation does not exercise its legislative powers in the same field (Article 72 of the Basic Law). The legal areas subject to concurrent legislation include civil, criminal, and road traffic law, as well as the law of association, the law relating to the residence and establishment of foreign nationals, the law relating to economic matters, employment law and certain aspects of consumer protection. With regard to certain matters listed in Article 74 of the Basic Law as falling in the scope of concurrent legislation, the Federation has the right to adopt legislation only if and to the extent that the establishment of equivalent living conditions throughout the federal territory or the maintenance of legal or economic unity renders federal regulation necessary in the national interest.

Land laws may not conflict with federal laws. Article 31 of the Basic Law states that, “Federal law shall take precedence over Land law”. This principle applies irrespective of the hierarchical statuses of the conflicting legal rules of law so that, for example, a federal statute will prevail over the constitution of a Land.

Hierarchy of norms

The Basic Law heads the hierarchy of domestic norms. It is superior to all other sources of domestic law and, as the Constitution, is the instrument on which the entire German legal system depends. Every legal provision adopted in Germany must be compatible with the Basic Law both in form and in substance. To this end, Article 20 (3) of the Basic Law specifies that the legislature is bound by the constitutional order, and the executive and judiciary by law and justice. Furthermore, the legislature, executive and the judiciary are particularly bound by the basic rights laid down in articles 1 to 19 of the Basic Law, which are directly applicable law (Article 1(3)). The precedence of the Basic Law is ultimately safeguarded by the Federal Constitutional Court.

Article 79(2) stipulates that the Basic Law can only be amended by a two-thirds majority of the members of the Bundestag and two-thirds of the votes of the Bundesrat, which is the organ through which the Länder participate in the enactment of legislation within, and administration of, the Federation, and in matters concerning the European Union. Certain key components of the Basic Law – i. e. the division of the Federation into Länder, their participation, in principle, in the legislative process and the principles laid down in Articles 1 and 20 – may not be amended at all (Article 79(3)).

The general rules of international law rank below the Constitution but before the laws of the Federation and the Länder. The Basic Law explicitly states that these general rules are an integral part of federal law, that they take precedence over such laws and that they directly create rights and duties for the inhabitants of the federal territory (Article 25). These general rules of international law with legal effect for individuals (i.e. not just rules relevant to the State) include, for example, the guarantee of an appropriate form of legal protection for foreigners or the “speciality rule”, whereby criminal proceedings are subject to the terms of the extradition authorisation of the extraditing foreign state.

Legislation ranks below the Constitution. The legislative powers of the Federation in relation to the Länder are enumerated in detail by the Basic Law (Articles 71-74). Laws are passed by the Bundestag in conjunction with the Bundesrat. Bills may be introduced in the Bundestag by the Federal Government, by the Bundesrat, or from the floor of the Bundestag (by a parliamentary group or 5% of its members). The Basic Law specifies the cases in which final approval of a law by the Bundestag requires the consent of the Bundesrat (currently - according to statistical material published by the Bundesrat on its website at – about 45% of all laws). As for the remaining laws passed by the Bundestag, the Bundesrat may only object to a bill adopted by the Bundestag, which in turn may be rejected by the Bundestag. Where there are differences of opinion between the Bundestag and the Bundesrat, a common committee for joint consideration of bills (the so-called Mediation Committee) composed of an equal number of members of the Bundestag and the Bundesrat (currently 16 members each) may be convened. The role of the Mediation Committee is to produce proposals for achieving unanimity, though it cannot itself make decisions on behalf of the Bundestag and the Bundesrat.

Statutory instruments are subordinate to legislation and may be issued by the Federal Government, a federal minister or the Land governments. Bylaws rank beneath statutory instruments and may be issued by a corporate body organised under public law (e.g. a municipality).

Institutional framework

Institutions responsible for the adoption of legal rules

German laws are made by the country’s parliaments. The Bundestag is therefore the most important legislative organ. It decides on all laws that fall within the sphere of competence of the German Federation in a legislative process that also requires the participation of the Bundesrat.

The Bundesrat, the Federal Government and the members and parliamentary groups of the Bundestag are entitled to introduce new or revised pieces of legislation in the Bundestag as bills. These bills are debated, deliberated on and voted on in Parliament in accordance with a precisely regulated procedure.

Under Germany's federal system, the Länder hold a considerable share of the powers of the state, and therefore the Bundesrat also participates in the adoption of legislation. All acts are submitted to the Bundesrat for it to vote on and – depending on the nature of the proposed legislation – it may even cause the rejection of some proposals.

For further details please refer to the website of the Bundestag.

Decision - making process

Passage of legislation

Most bills and items for discussion are drawn up by the Federal Government. As the central level of the executive, it has most experience of the implementation of legislation and possesses direct knowledge of where new statutory provisions are needed in practice.

However, not only the Federal Government but also the Bundesrat and members of the German Bundestag are entitled to initiate the bills that result in new legal acts.

Initiatives introduced by the Federal Government or the Bundesrat

If the Federal Government wishes to amend or introduce a law, the Federal Chancellor must initially refer the bill to the Bundesrat.

As a rule, the Bundesrat then has a period of 6 weeks in which to deliver its comments on the bill, to which the government may in turn respond with a written counterstatement. The Federal Chancellor then forwards the bill to the Bundestag with the Bundesrat's comments. One exception to this procedure is the draft Budget Act, which is transmitted simultaneously to the Bundesrat and the Bundestag.

A similar procedure applies when legislative initiatives are introduced by the Bundesrat. Once the majority of the members of the Bundesrat have voted in favour of a bill, it goes first to the Federal Government, which attaches its comments to it, usually within 6 weeks, and it is then forwarded to the Bundestag.

Initiatives introduced from the floor of the Bundestag

Draft laws may also be initiated by members of the Bundestag, in which case they must be supported either by at least 1 of the parliamentary groups or by at least 5% of the members of the Bundestag.

Bills introduced in this way do not have to be submitted first to the Bundesrat. For this reason, the government sometimes arranges for particularly urgent bills to be introduced by its parliamentary groups in the Bundestag.

Distribution of printed papers

Before a bill can be deliberated on in the Bundestag, it must initially be referred to the President of the Bundestag, then registered and printed by the Administration.

It is then distributed to all members of the Bundestag and Bundesrat, and to the federal ministries, as a Bundestag printed paper.

As soon as the bill has been placed on the agenda of the plenary, the first stage of its passage through Parliament is over: it may then be officially introduced in the public forum of the Bundestag.

Three readings in the plenary

As a rule, bills are debated 3 times in the plenary of the Bundestag – these debates are known as readings.

During the 1st reading, a debate is only held if this has been agreed in the Council of Elders (i.e. a special executive body of the Bundestag) or demanded by one of the parliamentary groups. For the most part, this happens when legislative projects are particularly controversial or of special interest to the public.

The primary goal of the 1st reading is to designate one or several committees to consider the bill and prepare it for its 2nd reading. This is done on the basis of recommendations made by the Council of Elders.

If several committees are designated, one committee is given overall responsibility for the deliberations on the item, and is responsible for the bill's passage through Parliament. The other committees are asked for their opinions on the bill.

Legislative work in the committees

The detailed work on legislation takes place in the permanent committees, which comprise members from all the parliamentary groups. The committee members familiarise themselves with the material and deliberate on it at their meetings. They may also invite experts and representatives of interest groups to public hearings.

In parallel to the work done by the committees, the parliamentary groups form working groups, in which they examine the issues concerned and define their own positions.

It is not unusual for bridges to be built between the parliamentary groups in the committees. Most bills are revised to a greater or lesser extent as a result of collaboration between the governing and opposition parliamentary groups.

Following conclusion of the deliberations, the committee with overall responsibility for a bill presents the plenary with a report on the course and results of its deliberations. The decision it recommends forms the basis for the 2nd reading that now takes place in the plenary.

Debate during the second reading

Before the 2nd reading, all members receive the published recommendation for a decision in printed form. They are therefore well prepared for the debate. The parliamentary groups also coordinate their positions once again in internal meetings prior to this debate, in order to present a united front in the public 2nd reading.

Following the general debate, all the provisions set out in the bill may be considered individually. As a rule, however, the plenary moves directly to a vote on the bill as a whole.

Any member of the Bundestag may table motions for amendments, which are then dealt with immediately in the plenary. If the plenary adopts amendments, the new version of the bill must first be printed and distributed. However, this procedure may be abbreviated with the consent of two-thirds of the members present. It is then possible for the third reading to begin immediately.

Voting during the third reading

Another debate is held during the 3rd reading only if this is requested by a parliamentary group or at least 5% of the members of the Bundestag.

Motions for amendments may no longer be tabled by individual members at this stage, but only by one of the parliamentary groups or by 5% of the members of the Bundestag. Furthermore, motions may only be tabled on amendments adopted during the second reading.

The final vote is held at the end of the 3rd reading. When the President of the Bundestag asks for votes in favour of the bill, votes against and abstentions, the members respond by rising from their seats.

Once a bill has gained the necessary majority in the plenary of the Bundestag, it is transmitted to the Bundesrat as an act.

Consent of the Bundesrat

Through the Bundesrat the Länder are involved in the shaping of every piece of legislation. In this respect, the Bundesrat's rights to participate in the legislative process are precisely defined.

The Bundesrat may not make amendments to an act adopted by the Bundestag. However, if it does not give its consent to an act, it may demand that the Mediation Committee be convened. The Mediation Committee consists of an equal number of members of the Bundestag and Bundesrat.

For some bills, the consent of the Bundesrat is a compulsory requirement. These include, for example, acts which affect the finances and administrative competencies of the Länder.

Where bills to which the Bundesrat may lodge an objection are concerned, the Bundestag may put an act into force even if no agreement has been reached in the Mediation Committee. However, this requires another vote in which the Bundestag passes the bill by an absolute majority.

Entry into force

Once a bill has been approved by the Bundestag and the Bundesrat, it has to go through a number of further stages before it can enter into force.

An act that has been adopted is first printed and transmitted to the Federal Chancellor and the competent federal minister, who countersign it.

The Federal President then receives the act for signing into law. He or she examines whether the act has been adopted in accordance with the Constitution and is free of evident material contraventions of the Basic Law. Once these checks have been carried out, the Federal President signs the act and orders that it be published in the Federal Law Gazette (Bundesgesetzblatt).

At this point, the act is promulgated. Should no specific date be mentioned in the act for its entry into force, this occurs on the 14th day after the day on which the Federal Law Gazette containing it was published.

For further details please refer to the website of the German Parliament (Bundestag)

Legal databases

In its German legal database, JURIS, the Federal Ministry of Justice provides, among other things, the federal law in its up-to-date valid version. A complete set of earlier versions is included as well as laws that have been published but have not yet come into effect.

It also contains the Unification Treaty and regulations of the former GDR that still apply in the Federal Republic of Germany.

The law of the federal states (Länder) is complete and up-to-date.

Certain pieces of legislation are also available in English: for example:

- the Civil Code (BGB),
- the Criminal Code (StGB)
- parts of the Introductory Act to the Civil Code (EGBGB).

Access to the database is not free.

Two legal databases containing almost all of the current Federal Law (including statutory orders) are provided for interested citizens free of charge from the site Gesetze im Internet and from the Federal Ministry of Justice. Both databases are provided by the Federal Ministry of Justice together with the Juris GmbH.

Additionally, the Federal Ministry of the Interior – in cooperation with the Juris GmbH – has established a database for the publication of federal regulations

Related Links

German Federal Government

Publication of federal regulations

Introductory Act to the Civil Code

Criminal Code

Civil Code

Bundestag

Organs

---

The national language version of this page is maintained by the respective Member State. The translations have been done by the European Commission service. Possible changes introduced in the original by the competent national authority may not be yet reflected in the translations. The European Commission accepts no responsibility or liability whatsoever with regard to any information or data contained or referred to in this document. Please refer to the legal notice to see copyright rules for the Member State responsible for this page.

Last update: 20/02/2013

Member State law - Estonia

The language version you are now viewing is currently being prepared by our translators. Please note that the following languages: et have already been translated.

Sources of law

Estonia is part of the Continental European legal system (civil law system). The most important sources of law are legal instruments such as the Constitution, European Union law, international agreements, Acts and Regulations.

Legal interpretations given by the highest court — the Supreme Court — and comments by experts also serve as reference points (e.g. the commented edition of the Constitution). Court judgments do not create rights, and in general judgments handed down by higher courts are not binding on lower courts. However, the Supreme Court, which is also the court of constitutional review, is authorised to declare legal instruments invalid if they are not in accordance with the Constitution or with legal instruments taking precedence over them. When addressing particular cases, no court may apply such an instrument, and the courts are authorised not to apply any legal instrument that is in conflict with the Constitution. The Supreme Court, as the court of constitutional review, then examines the case further and is authorised to declare any such instrument unconstitutional (but not invalid).

Generally recognised principles and rules of international law are an inseparable part of the Estonian legal system.

Types of legal instruments — description

Constitution — in accordance with Section 3(1) of the Constitution, State authority is exercised solely pursuant to the Constitution and Acts which are in conformity with it.

Acts — in accordance with Section 65 of the Constitution, Acts are adopted by the Estonian Parliament (the Riigikogu), in which legislative power is vested. Acts are adopted in accordance with the Constitution and are published in the prescribed manner in Riigi Teataja (the State Gazette). Only Acts that have been published are enforceable.

Regulation — in accordance with Sections 87 and 94 of the Constitution, the Government of the Republic and Ministers are authorised to issue Regulations on the basis of and for the purpose of complying with an Act. In order to deal with issues of local importance or in cases laid down in an Act, local government councils are also authorised to issue Regulations. A Regulation is, in essence, a basic act. Regulations may be issued only on the basis of a limited scope of authority laid down in an Act. In addition to the Government of the Republic, the right to issue Regulations has also been granted to other independent legal entities — legal persons in public law (universities) and public bodies. Furthermore, on the basis of Section 154(1) of the Constitution local government councils are also authorised to issue Regulations, as is Eesti Pank (the Bank of Estonia) on the basis of Section 111.

The Government of the Republic and the Ministers are authorised to issue Regulations on the basis of and for the purpose of complying with an Act. Regulations enter into force on the third day following their publication in Riigi Teataja, except as otherwise provided in the Regulation.

Administrative Order — an individual administrative act by which a public-law administration decides on and organises individual legal issues. In accordance with Section 87(6) of the Constitution, the Government of the Republic issues Administrative Orders on the basis of and for compliance with an Act. The Prime Minister, county governors and local governments are also authorised to issue Administrative Orders.

Decision — an individual administrative act issued on the basis of administrative challenges or appeals or by which sanctions are imposed. Decisions are also adopted by Parliament, local government councils, the National Electoral Committee and the courts.

Order — in accordance with Section 94 of the Constitution, Ministers issue Orders on the basis of and for compliance with an Act. An Order includes a general mandatory code of conduct for issues relating to service in a Ministry or for determining the structure and organising the operations of State bodies operating under the jurisdiction of a Ministry.

International agreements and the primacy of European Union law — in accordance with Section 3(1) of the Constitution, generally recognised principles and rules of international law are an inseparable part of the Estonian legal system. Section 123 of the Constitution states that the Republic of Estonia does not enter into international agreements that are in conflict with the Constitution. The Act amending the Constitution lays down the principle of the primacy of European Union law. Pursuant to Section 2 of that Act, while Estonia is a member of the European Union the Estonian Constitution applies, having regard to the rights and obligations under the Act of Accession. If Estonian Acts or other legal instruments are in conflict with international agreements ratified by Parliament, the provisions of the international agreement apply.

International agreements enter into force in accordance with the procedure laid down in the agreements.

The application of foreign law is regulated by the Private International Law Act.

If foreign law is to be applied under an Act, international agreement or transaction, it is applied by a court irrespective of whether an application to that end has been made. Foreign law is applied in accordance with its interpretation and application in practice in the country concerned. Foreign law is not applied if the result would be a clear contradiction with the fundamental principles of Estonian law (public order). In such cases, Estonian law is applied.

Decree — under Section 109 of the Constitution, if it is impossible to convene Parliament, the President of the Republic may, in the event of urgent national need, issue Decrees having the force of law. Such Decrees must be countersigned by the President (speaker) of the Parliament and the Prime Minister. Under the Constitution, the President may issue:

- special decrees in the event of urgent national need and if it is impossible to convene Parliament;
- emergency decrees in the event of urgent national need, where the Government has declared a state of emergency and if it is impossible to convene Parliament or there is not enough time for Parliament to be convened.

A Decree issued by the President of the Republic enters into force on the tenth day following its publication in Riigi Teataja, except as otherwise provided in the Decree.

Once Parliament has convened, the President of the Republic lays the Decrees before Parliament, which then promptly adopts an Act to approve or repeal them. Under Section 110 of the Constitution, the President of the Republic may not use a Decree to enact, amend or repeal the Constitution, the Acts referred to in Section 104 of the Constitution, Acts setting national taxes or the State budget.

Hierarchy of legal instruments

The hierarchy of legal instruments is as follows: the Constitution, European Union law, international agreements, Acts and Decrees, Government of the Republic Regulations and Regulations issued by Ministers. Besides basic legal acts, there are also individual acts that are issued on the basis of an Act and are located in the hierarchy below Acts and Regulations. The legal instruments at each level must be in accordance with those at a higher level.

Institutional framework

Institutions responsible for the adoption of legal instruments

Estonian institutional organisation follows the principle of the separation and balance of powers (Section 4 of the Constitution).

Legislative power rests with Parliament. Under Section 103 of the Constitution, the right to initiate legislative proposals rests with Members of Parliament, Parliamentary political groups, Parliamentary committees, the Government of the Republic and the President of the Republic. However, the President of the Republic may only initiate amendments to the Constitution. Parliament debates draft legislation and decides whether to adopt it as an Act or reject it.

On the basis of a decision taken by an absolute majority of its Members, Parliament has the right to make a proposal to the Government of the Republic for draft legislation desired by Parliament to be initiated.

Parliament has the right to put a draft Act or an issue of national importance to a referendum. The outcome of the referendum is decided by a majority vote of those who take part. Acts adopted by means of a referendum are promptly promulgated by the President of the Republic. Decisions taken in referenda are binding on all public authorities. If a draft Act put to a referendum does not receive a majority of votes in favour, the President of the Republic declares extraordinary Parliamentary elections. Issues concerning the budget, taxes, the State's financial obligations, the ratification or denunciation of international agreements, the declaration or lifting of a state of emergency and national defence may not be put to a referendum.

Executive powers are exercised by the Government of the Republic. In most cases draft legislation is put before Parliament by the Government of the Republic. The draft Acts are submitted to the Government by the ministries, and there must have been a prior consultation stage between the ministries.

The Chancellor of Justice and the Auditor General participate in and have the right to speak at Government meetings. Their suggestions are not binding on the Government, but their recommendations and suggestions are often taken into account. If the Chancellor of Justice and the Auditor General believe it necessary, they may put their suggestions directly to the appropriate Parliamentary committee that is dealing with the draft legislation. In accordance with Section 139 of the Constitution, the Chancellor of Justice analyses all suggestions made to him or her concerning legislative amendments, the adoption of new Acts and the work of government bodies and, where necessary, submits a report to Parliament. If the Chancellor of Justice finds that a legal act adopted by the legislature, the executive branch or a local authority contradicts the Constitution or an Act, he or she makes a proposal to the body that adopted the act to bring it into conformity with the Constitution or the Act within 20 days. If the act is not brought into conformity with the Constitution or the Act within that time, the Chancellor of Justice makes a proposal to the Supreme Court for it to be declared invalid on the basis of Section 142 of the Constitution.

The President of the Republic promulgates Acts adopted by Parliament or refuses to do so. In the latter case, the President of the Republic returns the Act, together with his or her reasons, to Parliament for a new debate and decision.

The Ministry of Justice publishes adopted Acts promulgated by the President of the Republic in the Estonian official publication Riigi Teataja (State Gazette).

Decision-making process

The legislative process in the Estonian Parliament comprises the following stages:

- initiation of draft legislation;
- examination of draft legislation;
- adoption of draft legislation.

Initiation

In accordance with Section 103 of the Constitution, the Government of the Republic, Members of Parliament, Parliamentary political groups, Parliamentary committees and the President of the Republic have the right to initiate legislative proposals. However, the President may only initiate draft amendments to the Constitution. Draft legislation must meet the technical rules adopted by the Board of the Parliament and the legislative and technical rules adopted by the Government of the Republic. The Board of the Parliament directs draft legislation to the permanent Parliamentary committee responsible for the draft.

Examination of draft legislation

Draft legislation is prepared for the plenary session of Parliament by a permanent Parliamentary committee (the Legal Affairs Committee, the Constitutional Committee, the Economic Affairs Committee, etc.). On the proposal of the committee responsible, the draft legislation is added to the agenda for the plenary session of Parliament.

In accordance with the Riigikogu Internal Rules and Rules of Procedure Act, the first reading of draft legislation must take place within seven Parliamentary plenary working weeks of it having been accepted. Draft Acts are debated by the Parliamentary plenary session at three readings, at the first of which there is a debate on the general principles behind the draft Act. If no motions for the draft to be rejected are made by the committee responsible or by any political group during the negotiations, the first reading ends without a vote. Following the first reading, Members of Parliament and the Parliamentary committees and political groups have 10 working days to put forward amendments. If the committee responsible so proposes, the President of the Parliament may set a different deadline for putting forward amendments.

The committee responsible reviews all proposed amendments and decides whether to take them into account when drawing up the new text of the draft. The committee draws up a new version of the draft for the second reading, including all the accepted amendments and any amendments made by the committee itself. It also draws up an explanatory memorandum for the second reading, which includes information relating to the processing of the draft legislation, such as the reasons for accepting or rejecting proposed amendments and the positions of the person who initiated or submitted the draft legislation, experts involved in the process and other persons.

Draft legislation is put on the agenda for a second reading on the proposal of the committee responsible. On the proposal of the Board of the Parliament, the committee responsible or the person who initiated the draft legislation, Parliament suspends the second reading of the draft legislation without a vote. If a political group proposes that the reading be suspended, it is put to a vote. If the second reading of draft legislation is suspended, amendments may still be put forward. If the second reading in Parliament is not suspended, it is deemed to have ended and the draft legislation is sent for a third reading.

A draft Parliamentary Decision may be put to a vote following the end of the second reading.

The committee responsible draws up the final text of the draft legislation for the third reading, making linguistic and technical improvements once the second reading has ended. The committee may draw up an explanatory memorandum for the third reading, providing an overview of the changes made after the second reading ended. In the third reading of draft legislation, negotiations are opened during which representatives from the political groups present statements. At its third reading, draft legislation is put to a final vote.

Adoption

Acts and Parliamentary Decisions are adopted by means of an open vote in Parliament. A final vote is taken during the third reading of draft Acts. The number of Members of Parliament required to vote in favour for an Act to be adopted is laid down in Sections 73 and 104 of the Constitution, in accordance with which Acts are categorised as:

- constitutional Acts, i.e. Acts requiring an absolute majority of the Members of Parliament (more than half of the 101 Members of Parliament must vote in favour of adopting the Act); or
- ordinary Acts, i.e. Acts requiring a simple majority (more Members of Parliament must vote in favour of adopting the Act than against it).

The following Acts may be adopted or amended only by an absolute majority of the Members of Parliament:

- the Citizenship Act;
- the Riigikogu Election Act;
- the President of the Republic Election Act;
- the Local Government Council Election Act;
- the Referendum Act;
- the Riigikogu Rules of Procedure Act and the Riigikogu Internal Rules Act;
- the Act on the Remuneration of the President of the Republic and of Members of the Riigikogu;
- the Government of the Republic Act;
- the Act on the Initiation of Court Proceedings against the President of the Republic and Members of the Riigikogu;
- the Act on the Cultural Autonomy of National Minorities;
- the State Budget Act;
- the Eesti Pank Act;
- the National Audit Office Act;
- the Court Organisation Act and Acts concerning court proceedings;
- Acts pertaining to foreign and domestic borrowing and the proprietary obligations of the State;
- the State of Emergency Act;
- the Peace-Time National Defence Act and the War-Time National Defence Act.

Once an Act or Parliamentary Decision has been adopted, it is signed by the President of the Parliament, or in his or her absence by the Vice-President of the Parliament who chaired the session, at the latest on the fifth working day following its adoption.

Promulgation

After an Act is adopted and signed, it is sent to the President of the Republic to be promulgated. The President of the Republic may refuse to promulgate an Act adopted by Parliament and may within 14 days of receiving it return it, together with his or her reasons, to Parliament for a new debate and decision. If an Act that has been returned by the President of the Republic is adopted by Parliament for the second time in unamended form, the President of the Republic either promulgates the Act or proposes that the Supreme Court declare the Act unconstitutional. If the Supreme Court finds that the Act complies with the Constitution, the President of the Republic must promulgate it.

The Act enters into force on the tenth day after its publication in Riigi Teataja, unless provided otherwise in the Act itself.

Publication of legal instruments

The most important legal instruments and international agreements are published in Riigi Teataja. Acts and Regulations gain legal force only once they have been published in Riigi Teataja.

 Riigi Teataja is Estonia's official online publication and the central database of legal instruments. Since 1 June 2010 Riigi Teataja has been published only on the internet, as an official online publication.

Since 1 January 2011, Riigi Teataja has been published by the Ministry of Justice.

Brief description of content

Acts, Regulations, international agreements, Parliamentary Decisions and Government of the Republic Orders are published in Riigi Teataja, and other important information such as translations of legal instruments and procedural information concerning the draft versions of instruments may be made available there.

The majority of instruments adopted since 1990 are available in Riigi Teataja.

Since 1 June 2002, official consolidated versions of Acts, Decrees of the President of the Republic, Government Regulations and Orders, ministerial Regulations, Regulations of the President of Eesti Pank and National Electoral Committee Regulations have been published in Riigi Teataja. Consolidated versions of Parliamentary Decisions have been published since 1 June 2010 and consolidated versions of local authority regulations since the end of 2011.

Each time such instruments are amended, an updated and consolidated version containing the amendments is drawn up and published at the same time as the amending instrument, together with information on when it will be in force. The consolidated texts are official and they can be relied upon when enforcing the law. They have legal force.

All published legal instruments are stamped digitally when they are published. Anyone is able to check the digital stamp, which ensures that the instrument has remained unaltered since its publication. All published instruments are also linked to a time stamp, which enables any cases of unauthorised processing to be detected.

You can view the consolidated versions that are/were in force on any particular date. You can also access future versions of these instruments, where they are known. Each consolidated version is linked to the previous and subsequent versions. This allows you to 'move in time' from the one version of the consolidated text to the next and vice versa. You have the opportunity to compare different consolidated versions of the same instrument to see what amendments have been made.

The links present in the consolidated version allow you to open the Regulations enacted on the basis of the Act and to move from those Regulations to the provisions of the Act on the basis of which the Regulations are enacted.

Procedural information is also added to the instruments in Riigi Teataja, including explanatory memoranda (links to the consultation database and to Parliamentary proceedings), links with European Union legislation, translations and other additional information necessary to understand the legal instrument.

On the Riigi Teataja website you can search for the case law of the county courts, district courts and Supreme Court. Information is also available about the time and place of court hearings.

Summaries and overviews of Supreme Court rulings and all judgments passed by the European Court of Human Rights (ECHR) are also published. The summaries have been systematised, and you can search the summaries of Supreme Court rulings by keyword or by reference to legal instruments. ECHR judgments are searchable by Article.

Various news items relating to Acts and the law in general are also published in Riigi Teataja.

In 2011 sworn translators began providing English translations of the updated texts of Acts, a process that was organised by the Ministry of Justice. On 30 October 2013 the English Riigi Teataja website was launched. This contains updated English translations of the consolidated texts of Acts. By the end of 2014, updated translations of the consolidated texts of all Estonian Acts in force (with the exception of ratification Acts) will have been published. Although the translations do not have legal force they are kept updated, and the translations of amendments are generally added to the consolidated texts before the amendments enter into force. Anyone can have the latest translations sent to their e-mail address by signing up for the My RT service.

There is also a search function for draft legal instruments which lets you search the various procedural stages through which adopted instruments have passed and draft instruments are still passing. From there you can access all the information concerning the legislative procedures and the relevant documents that have been drawn up. You can also request procedural information concerning the passage of various legal instruments from one procedural step to the next. This will be sent to your e-mail address if you sign up for the Estonian-language Minu RT service.

By using the Minu RT service, everyone has the opportunity to set up their own user portal in which they can add instruments to their collection of links and ask via the portal to be informed by e-mail of new instruments and any new additional information.

Is access to the database of Estonian legislation free of charge?

Access to Riigi Teataja and to all legal information services is free of charge for users.

Free access to the electronic Riigi Teataja is granted at local governments and public libraries (approximately 600) to anyone interested. Assistance is also provided in searching for the relevant instruments. Users must be permitted to print up to 20 pages free of charge.

History of the database of Estonian legislation

☞ Riigi Teataja is the official publication of the Republic of Estonia and has been published since 27 November 1918. Publication of Riigi Teataja was suspended in 1940 and resumed in 1990.

Riigi Teataja has been published on the internet since 1996, and on 1 June 2002 the online version was given official status.

Since 1 June 2010 Riigi Teataja has been published only on the internet, as an official online publication. It has not been published on paper since then.

In November 2010 a new, more user-friendly IT system was introduced offering more legal information. The IT system was developed under the guidance of the Government Office using funding from the European Regional Development Fund.

Summaries of Supreme Court rulings and ECHR judgments, various news items concerning the law in general and information on case-law and court hearings have been available on the Riigi Teataja website since 20 January 2012.

A search function for draft instruments was introduced at the end of 2012.

As of 2013, the up-to-date consolidated versions of all Regulations adopted by local authorities are published in Riigi Teataja.

Since 24 September 2013, all legal instruments are given the issuing body's digital stamp and a time stamp when they are published in Riigi Teataja.

The English-language Riigi Teataja website was launched on 30 October 2013.

A connection will be created to the European N-Lex portal as part of the process of developing the new electronic Riigi Teataja IT system.

---

The national language version of this page is maintained by the respective Member State. The translations have been done by the European Commission service. Possible changes introduced in the original by the competent national authority may not be yet reflected in the translations. The European Commission accepts no responsibility or liability whatsoever with regard to any information or data contained or referred to in this document. Please refer to the legal notice to see copyright rules for the Member State responsible for this page.

Last update: 17/03/2017

Member State law - Ireland

This page gives you information on the legal system in Ireland.

---

Legal Order

1. Legal Instruments/Sources of Law

1.1. National Sources

The Constitution of Ireland (in the Irish language, Bunreacht na hÉireann), which came into force on 29th December 1937, is the basic or fundamental law in the State. It establishes the institutions and apparatus of State and provides for the tripartite separation of powers into Executive, Legislative and Judicial. It also guarantees fundamental rights which have been subjected to rigorous interpretation and extension by the courts.

Primary legislation consists of Acts adopted by the Oireachtas (Parliament), consisting of the President of Ireland, Seanad Éireann (Upper House) and Dáil Éireann (Lower House). Primary legislation is divided into: Acts to amend the Constitution, which must be accepted by the people in a Referendum to become effective; Public General Acts, which are of general application; and Private Acts, which are directed towards the behaviour of a particular individual or group of individuals.

Secondary legislation is a mechanism by which the Oireachtas may delegate legislative powers to a Minister of Government or a particular authority. The power to make delegated legislation must be expressly conferred by primary legislation and stringent conditions govern its exercise – the principles and policies to be implemented must be clearly and unambiguously stated in the parent act and strictly followed by the authority making the secondary legislation. Statutory Instruments are the most common form of secondary legislation but they can also take the form of Regulations, Orders, Rules, Schemes or Bye-laws.

By virtue of Article 50 of the Constitution, pre-1922 laws relating to Ireland (e.g. Acts of the United Kingdom Parliament) and measures adopted by the Irish Free State (1922 – 1937), which are not inconsistent with the Constitution remain in force. Many of the pre-1922 laws which had no ongoing relevance to Ireland were repealed by the Statute Law Revision Acts 2005-2012.

The Irish legal system is a common law system and this means that Judge-made law is an important source of law. Under the doctrine of precedent, or stare decisis, a court is bound to follow decisions in former cases, particularly decisions of higher courts. However, this is a policy and not a binding unalterable rule. This body of law includes rules, general principles, canons of construction and maxims. The doctrine of stare decisis draws a distinction between ratio decidendi, the binding part of a decision which must be followed, and obiter dictum, observations made by a judge in a case on issues which were present, or not material, in the case, or which arose in such a manner as not to require a decision. The obiter dictum is not binding in future cases but may be persuasive.

1.2. European Union Law

As Ireland is a member of the European Union (EU), EU law is an important part of the domestic legal order of the State. The obligations of EU membership entail that the Constitution and other national laws are subordinate to EU law whenever the Community has competence. An amendment of the Constitution was required to authorise the State to join the EU and to avoid a clash between provisions of the Constitution and EU law.

1.3. International Sources

Ireland is a signatory to many International Agreements and Treaties and is a member of many International Organisations. The Constitution provides that Ireland accepts the generally recognised principles of international law as governing relations between States.

Ireland is a dualist State and in order to have formal legal standing within the State, as opposed to between States, International Agreements must be incorporated into domestic law by the Oireachtas.

Ireland is a signatory to the European Convention on Human Rights since 1953 and since then, by way of the State's international legal obligations, citizens could rely upon its provisions before the European Court of Human Rights. Domestic legal effect has been given to the Convention's provisions by way of the European Convention on Human Rights Act 2003 which incorporated the ECHR into Irish law.

2. Other Sources

In the absence of formal legal rules, scholarly writing may be cited by counsel during a case and by a court in reaching its decision. Although there is debate as to whether it should apply at all and its influence may have waned in recent years, natural law and natural rights have been relied upon by the Courts in interpreting the Constitution and in the enumeration of constitutional rights not specifically provided for in the text of the Constitution.

3. Hierarchy of Legal Sources

The Constitution is at the apex of Ireland's legal system. Legislation, governmental and administrative decisions and practice may be reviewed against the Constitution for compliance.

The Constitution provides however, that it will not invalidate any acts or measures which are necessitated by membership of the EU. This is provided for in Article 29.4.6 of the Constitution. Thus EU law takes precedence over all national laws including the Constitution. Due to the fact that EU law provides that the methods of its implementation are to be determined by national procedural requirements, instruments implementing EU law must still be in accordance with procedural Constitutional requirements.

The European Convention on Human Rights Act 2003 enables individuals to rely on the provisions of the ECHR before Irish Courts. The ECHR has been incorporated at sub-constitutional level and the Constitution retains primacy. The Act requires that the courts interpret and apply national provisions, as far as is possible, in accordance with the precepts contained in the ECHR. If domestic legislation is not in accordance with the ECHR a Declaration of Incompatibility will issue.

The courts have held that principles of customary international law form part of domestic law by virtue of Article 29.3 of the Constitution, but only to the extent to which they do not conflict with the Constitution, legislation or common law. International Agreements may only be ratified if they are in accordance with the Constitution, otherwise a referendum will be required.

Legislation can be replaced or amended by subsequent legislation. Secondary legislation may be superseded by primary legislation, as may the power of delegation to make secondary legislation, but secondary legislation can not override primary legislation. The courts may strike down legislation on the ground that it is invalid having regard to the provisions of the Constitution (post-1937 legislation) or that it is inconsistent with the Constitution (pre-1937 legislation). There is a presumption that post-1937 legislation is consistent with the Constitution.

Decisions of courts can be superseded by legislative or constitutional enactments and subsequent decisions of courts of equal or higher rank.

4. Entry into Force of Supranational instruments

The Constitution as originally drafted was not compatible with the European Community law. For example, it provided that the Oireachtas was the sole legislating body in the State. For this reason a provision was inserted into the Constitution providing that it will not invalidate any law, act or measure necessitated by membership of the EU. However, it has been held that if the scope and objectives should change, for example, by way of a new Treaty, this must be put by way of referendum to the people and, if accepted by the people, a provision will be inserted confirming that the State may ratify such Treaty.

If EU law requires transposition by the State this is implemented by primary legislation or more usually by Statutory Instrument made by the Government or a Government Minister.

According to the Constitution, international agreements will become a part of domestic law if the Oireachtas so determine. This will usually be by way of an Act and an example is the European Convention on Human Rights Act, 2003, by which the Convention became incorporated into domestic law, with the result that individuals may rely on its provisions before domestic courts.

5. Authorities empowered to adopt rules of law

The Constitution provides that the Oireachtas, which is comprised of the Dáil (Lower House) and Seanad (Upper House) and the President, has 'the sole and exclusive power of making laws for the State' subject to the obligations of Community membership as provided for in the Constitution. Proposed legislation in the form of a Bill must be signed into law by the President in order to take effect and if the President is in doubt as to the constitutionality of the Bill of proposed legislation he may convene the council of state, and if necessary refer the Bill to the Supreme Court for determination pursuant to Article 26 of the Constitution. .

As mentioned above the Oireachtas may delegate the power to make legislation to a Minister of Government or other authority and this power is strictly circumscribed by the delegating instrument. EU Directives are usually implemented by way of Statutory Instrument made by a Minister. The power to legislate may be delegated to a variety of bodies such as Government Ministers, statutory boards, semi-state bodies, regulatory bodies, expert bodies and local authorities.

Under the Constitution the Government are responsible for conducting external relations and may sign International Treaties and Agreements and join International organisations subject to constitutional requirements.

Under the common law system Judge-made law is binding.

6. Process of adoption of rules of law

6.1. Constitution

The first stage in making an amendment to the Constitution, under Article 46, is to initiate a Bill in the Dáil. This Bill must be passed by both Houses of the Oireachtas and must then be submitted in a referendum to the people for their affirmation or rejection. The proposal will be held to have been approved by the people if a majority of the votes cast are in favour of its enactment into law. A proposal put to referendum which is not to amend the Constitution will be vetoed where a majority of votes are against the proposal and the votes cast against the proposal amount to not less than one-third of the voters on the register. The Bill must be expressed as 'An Act to amend the Constitution' and must not contain any other proposal. If approved by the people, the President must sign the Bill and it 'shall be duly promulgated by the President as a law.'

6.2. Legislative procedure

The first step in making primary legislation is usually for a Bill to be initiated in either House of the Oireachtas. Every Bill initiated in the Dáil must be sent to the Seanad for consideration and amendments may be made which the Dáil is obliged to consider. However, if a Bill is initiated and passed in the Seanad, and is subsequently amended by the Dáil, it is deemed to have been initiated by the Dáil and must return to the Seanad for consideration.

Before a Bill is promulgated, it must be approved by both Houses of the Oireachtas and must be signed by the President into law. During the course of its legislative passage, a Bill may be subjected to amendments in the Dáil and the Seanad. However, the Constitution consolidates the supremacy of the popularly elected Dáil; Article 23 provides that where the Seanad has rejected or amended a Bill contrary to the wishes of the Dáil it is open to the Dáil to pass a resolution within 180 days deeming the Bill to have been passed by both Houses. The Seanad has the power to delay a Bill by up to 90 days but does not have the power to prevent it becoming an Act or to change it unless the Dáil agrees.

The vast majority of Bills are initiated in Dáil Éireann by a Government Minister.

Money Bills (e.g. Bills that deal with the imposition, repeal, remission or alteration or regulation of taxation and Bills that involve a charge on public funds) can only be initiated and passed by Dáil Éireann. This type of Bill is sent to the Seanad for 'recommendations'.

The final step in the legislative procedure is for the President to sign the Bill into law. The President may, following consultation with the Council of State, refer a Bill, or a particular section of a Bill, to the Supreme Court for determination of constitutionality. This is known as an Article 26 Reference. Once the Supreme Court decides that the Bill is constitutional, it can never again be challenged on constitutional grounds in the courts and the President is required to sign it into law. If it is determined that the Bill is repugnant to the Constitution, the President must decline to sign it into law.

6.3. Secondary Legislation

It is commonly provided for in parent statute that the delegated legislation it authorises may be annulled or approved by the Oireachtas. These provisions generally provide that instruments be 'laid before' either or both Houses of the Oireachtas who may annul it within a stated period of time. All secondary legislation implementing EU measures is subject to this annulment mechanism. Following enactment, certain statutory instruments must be deposited in designated libraries and a notice of their enactment must be published in the official Irish State gazette Iris Oifigiúil.

6.4. International Law

The government may sign International Treaties or Agreements or join International Organisations, however it has been held that the government may not do so if it were to fetter the exclusive law-making power given to the Oireachtas or otherwise breach the Constitution. For this reason, the courts have held that Treaties changing the scope and objectives of the European Union may not be assented to by the Government unless accepted by the people in a constitutional referendum.

7. Entry into force or national rules

Amendments to the Constitution enter into force after they have been accepted by the people and the Bill proposing the amendment has been signed by the President.

A Bill becomes law on the day that it is signed by the President and shall come into effect on that day unless the contrary is provided for in the Act. The President does not usually sign a Bill earlier than the 5th day or later than the 7th day after it has been presented. An Act may specify the date from which it is to take effect or may provide that a Minister may make a 'commencement order' (secondary legislation) to bring the Act, or part of the Act, into force. The President is obliged to promulgate a Bill by publication of a notice in Iris Oifigiúil stating that it has become law.

Secondary legislation will specify the date on which it is to come into operation.

Court decisions generally have force from the day on which they are made.

8. Means of resolution of conflicts between different legal sources

It is for the courts to determine any conflicts between different legal rules or sources.

Subject to the superior position of EU law, the Constitution is the fundamental law of the State and it takes precedence in any conflict with other laws. According to Article 34 of the Constitution, individuals may challenge the constitutional validity of legislation before the High Court. Such a decision may be appealed to the Supreme Court. Individuals may also claim that their constitutional rights or constitutional procedure have been breached by the actions of the State.

It is presumed that legislation made after the adoption of the 1937 Constitution is in accordance with the Constitution until the contrary is established.

Circumstances may arise in which provisions of the Constitution, particularly fundamental rights provisions, may conflict to some degree. The courts have employed several mechanisms to reach decisions in these cases including literal or grammatical interpretation, the historical approach, the purposive or harmonious approach, the doctrine of proportionality, the hierarchy of rights approach and the commitment to natural law and natural rights approach.

There have been instances when, consequent upon an unpopular constitutional determination or interpretation by the Courts, a referendum has been held to amend the Constitution.

If an individual claims that his or her rights under the European Convention on Human Rights have been breached by legislation he or she may seek a Declaration of Incompatibility from the courts.

EU law enjoys constitutional immunity as the Constitution provides that it will not invalidate any acts or measures necessitated by membership, although the means of implementing these acts or measures must abide by the Constitution.

Aside from constitutional questions, the validity of delegated legislation will be judged by its compliance with its parent statute.

Further information on the Irish legal system, legislation and the Constitution can be found at the following sites:

- <http://www.taoiseach.ie/>
- <http://www.courts.ie/Judgments.nsf/Webpages/HomePage?OpenDocument>
- <http://www.irishstatutebook.ie>
- <http://www.bailii.org/>

---

The national language version of this page is maintained by the respective Member State. The translations have been done by the European Commission service. Possible changes introduced in the original by the competent national authority may not be yet reflected in the translations. The European Commission accepts no responsibility or liability whatsoever with regard to any information or data contained or referred to in this document. Please refer to the legal notice to see copyright rules for the Member State responsible for this page.

Last update: 12/11/2018

Member State law - Greece

This page provides you with information on the legal system in Greece.

---

Sources of law

- Legislation
- Customary law
- Generally accepted rules of international law
- European Union law
- International conventions
- Collective labour agreements
- Objective good faith (Αντικειμενική καλή πίστη)
- Good morals (Χρηστά ήθη)
- Custom and commercial usage (Συνήθειες και συναλλακτικά ήθη — general standards of behaviour)

Types of legal instrument - description

- The Constitution
- Statute (Τυπικός νόμος)
- Other acts with legislative content (Πράξεις νομοθετικού περιεχομένου)
- Presidential orders (Προεδρικό διάταγμα)
- Administrative measures (Διοικητικές πράξεις)
- Founding treaties of the EU
- EU regulations
- EU directives

- EU framework decisions
- International conventions

Hierarchy of norms

The Constitution prevails over all domestic legal instruments and is followed, in order of precedence, by statute law, presidential orders, and administrative measures. The founding treaties of the European Union are at the same formal level as the Constitution, while other international legal instruments prevail over all domestic legal instruments apart from the Constitution.

Institutional framework

Institutions responsible for enacting legal rules

When it becomes necessary to amend or supplement existing legislation, or to lay down new rules of law, or to incorporate rules of international law into domestic legislation:

the responsible minister asks a special legislative committee to draft a bill.

The legislative process

The draft bill prepared by the special legislative committee is sent to the central legislative committee in the General Secretariat to the Government, which ensures that it is properly drafted, and may make other observations regarding such things as constitutionality and compliance with international law.

The bill is then laid before Parliament, with an explanatory memorandum setting out the reasoning and purpose of the provisions proposed. If the bill would involve spending from the State budget, a special report on expenditure and a comparative report on expenditure are drawn up by the State General Accounting Office (Γενικό Λογιστήριο του Κράτους). Bills must also be accompanied by a report evaluating any measures that may have to be taken in consequence, and a report on the public consultation that preceded the submission of the bill, save in exceptional cases.

The Chairman of Parliament refers the bill for consideration either by the whole house or by the standing committees or recess committees of Parliament. Orders making provision for the implementation of Acts of Parliament are made by the President of the Republic on a proposal from the responsible ministers. Specific statutory provisions empower the administrative authorities to take measures regulating specific matters or points of local interest or of a technical or minor character.

Under Article 28 of the Constitution, international conventions, once they are ratified by Act of Parliament, are an integral part of domestic Greek law, and prevail over any earlier provision to the contrary, with the exception of the provisions of the Constitution.

EU regulations have universal validity throughout the Union; they are binding and directly effective in each Member State.

EU directives are incorporated into domestic law by statute, by Presidential order or by ministerial decision.

Within one month of the passing of an Act by Parliament it is signed by the responsible ministers and then signed and promulgated by the President of the Republic.

The Act itself will specify when it is to take effect. Otherwise, in accordance with Article 103 of the Introductory Act to the Civil Code, it takes effect 10 days after it is published in the Government Gazette (Εφημερίδα της Κυβερνήσεως).

An Act ratifying a Convention enters into force, as a general rule, upon publication of the Act in the Government Gazette, and the Convention takes legal effect on the date specified in the Convention.

The website of the Greek Parliament shows all Acts passed from 22 October 1993 onward. Furthermore, on the website of the National Printing House (Εθνικό Τυπογραφείο), you can use the 'Search' section ('Αναζητήσεις') to find lists for each year since 1890 showing Acts passed and orders made, indicating their subject matter and the details of the Government Gazette in which they were published.

The initiative in any amendment of an Act of Parliament lies with the minister who is responsible for the subjectmatter.

An Act of Parliament remains in force until such time as it is repealed by a fresh Act..

Legal databases

1. A complete legal database is owned and maintained by the National Printing House.

Access is free of charge (Article 7 of Act No 3861/2010, published in Government Gazette FEK A/112/13710).

2. A complete legal database is owned and maintained by Intracom and HOL.

Access is subject to a fee.

3. Website of the State Legal Council

Access is free of charge.

Related links

The Greek Parliament

The National Printing House

---

The national language version of this page is maintained by the respective Member State. The translations have been done by the European Commission service. Possible changes introduced in the original by the competent national authority may not be yet reflected in the translations. The European Commission accepts no responsibility or liability whatsoever with regard to any information or data contained or referred to in this document. Please refer to the legal notice to see copyright rules for the Member State responsible for this page.

Last update: 25/06/2018

Member State law - Spain

 Please note that the original language version of this page es has been amended recently. The language version you are now viewing is currently being prepared by our translators.

This page provides information about the Spanish legal system and a general overview of the legal system in Spain.

---

Sources of the Spanish legal system

The sources of the Spanish legal system are defined in Article 1 of the Civil Code:

1. The sources of the Spanish legal system are the Law, custom and the general principles of law.
2. Any provisions which contradict another of a higher ranking are invalid.
3. Custom only applies in the absence of any applicable law, provided that it is not contrary to morality or public order and has been proven.
4. Legal uses which are not merely interpretative of a declaration of will are deemed to be customs.
5. The general principles of law apply in the absence of law or custom, without prejudice to the informing nature of the legal system.
6. The legal rules contained in international treaties do not apply directly in Spain until they have become part of the internal rule of law by being published in full in the Official State Gazette.
7. Caselaw complements the legal system with the doctrine which is repeatedly established by the Supreme Court when interpreting and applying the law, custom and general principles of law.
8. The judges and courts have the inexcusable duty of resolving the cases they hear in every case, using the established system of sources.

Types of rules

Constitution: Supreme legal rule of the State, to which all public authorities and citizens are subject. Any provision or act contrary to the Constitution is invalid. It is structured in two clearly separate parts as regards its content: a) the dogmatic part, and b) the organic part.

International Treaties: a written agreement between certain subjects of international law and which is governed by it, which can consist of one or more related legal instruments, irrespective of what it is called.

Statutes of Autonomy: basic Spanish institutional rule of an Autonomous Community, recognised by the Spanish Constitution of 1978 and which is approved by the Organic Law. It contains at least the name of the Community, the territorial limits, the name, organisation and seat of the autonomous institutions and the powers assumed.

- Law: there are various types of laws.
- Organic Law: relating to the development of fundamental rights and civil liberties, those which approve the Statutes of Autonomy and the general electoral system and the others specified in the Constitution.
- Ordinary Law: governing matters to which the organic law relates.
- Legislative Decree: these mean the delegation by the Cortes Generales (Parliament) of the power to issue rules with the ranking of law in respect of certain subject matters.
- Decree-Law: provisional legislative provisions issued by the Government in extraordinary circumstances and emergencies and which cannot affect the arrangement of basic State institutions, rights, duties and liberties of citizens governed in Title One of the Constitution, the system of Autonomous Communities, nor the general electoral right. They must be submitted immediately for discussion and voting by the whole of the Congress of Deputies within thirty days of being issued.
- Regulation: a legal rule of a general nature issued by the executive authority. It ranks immediately below law in the hierarchical system and, generally speaking, develops it.
- Custom: is defined as 'the set of rules derived from the more or less constant repetition of uniform actions'. In order for custom to represent a collective and spontaneous will, it must be general, constant, uniform and lasting.
- General Principles of Law: listed general rules which, without having been incorporated into the legal system by formal procedures, are deemed to form part of it because they serve as a basis for other listed particular rules or embody in an abstract manner the content of a group of such rules. They are used to make up for legal shortcomings or to interpret legal rules.
- Case-law: is based on two sentences which interpret a rule in the same way, emanating from the Supreme Court and, in the case of certain subjects for which jurisdiction is limited to the Autonomous Community, from the Higher Courts of Justice in the Autonomous Community in question. In the event that a judge or court moves away from the doctrine established by the Supreme Court, the decision is not invalidated automatically but rather serves as the basis for an appeal on points of law. Nevertheless, the Supreme Court may move away from its consolidated case-law at any time.

Hierarchy of rules

Article 1.2 of the Spanish Civil Code states that 'provisions which contradict those of higher ranking are invalid'. This means that a hierarchy of rules must of necessity be established, and to this end the Spanish Constitution governs the interrelationship between the various rules and their hierarchical and jurisdictional relationships.

According to the Constitution, the primacy of rules under Spanish law is as follows:

1. The Constitution.
2. International Treaties.
3. Law in the strict sense: Organic Law, ordinary Law and rules with the ranking of Law (including Royal Decree-Law and Royal Legislative Decree).
4. Rules emanating from the executive, with their own hierarchy depending on the body which issues them (Royal Decree, Decree, Ministerial Order, etc.).

In addition to this, a principle of jurisdiction has been established with regard to rules emanating from the Autonomous Communities by means of their own Parliaments.

Institutional framework

Institutions responsible for passing legal rules.

The institutional framework in Spain is based on the principle of separation of power, with legislative power being attributed to the Cortes Generales and to the Legislative Assemblies of the Autonomous Communities.

The Government has the executive power, including the power to regulate and on occasions exercises legislative power by delegation from the Cortes Generales.

Regulatory rather than legislative power has been given to Local Authorities.

The legislative initiative lies with the Government, the Congress and the Senate, the Assemblies of the Autonomous Communities and the popular initiative.

The decision-making process

International Treaties: three approval mechanisms exist, depending on which type of subjects the Treaty is regulating.

- Firstly, organic Law authorises the conclusion of Treaties where the exercising of jurisdiction arising out of the Constitution is attributed to an international organisation or institution.
- Secondly, the Government may give State consent to being bound by Treaties or agreements with the prior authorisation of the Cortes Generales, in the following cases: Treaties of a political nature, Treaties or Agreements of a military nature, Treaties or Agreements which affect the territorial integrity of the State or the fundamental rights and duties set out in Title one, Treaties or Agreements which involve financial obligations for the Tax Authorities, Treaties or Agreements which require modification or derogation of any Law or require legislative measures in order to be implemented.
- Finally, for all other subjects it is merely necessary to inform the Congress and Senate immediately that the treaty has been entered into.

International Treaties which have been validly entered into, once officially published in Spain, become part of the internal order. Their provisions can only be derogated, modified or suspended in the manner specified in the Treaties themselves or in accordance with the general rules of International Law. International Treaties and agreements are terminated using the same procedure as for their approval.

Law:

Bills are approved by the Council of Ministers, which submits them to Congress, accompanied by an explanation of the reasons and background necessary for a decision to be taken on them.

Once an ordinary or organic bill has been approved by the Congress of Deputies, the President thereof immediately reports to the President of the Senate, who submits it for deliberation by the Senate. Within a period of two months from the day the draft is received, the Senate can exercise its veto or introduce amendments to it. The veto must be approved by an absolute majority.

The bill cannot be submitted to the King for his assent unless Congress ratifies the initial draft by absolute majority, in the case of a veto, or by simple majority once two months have passed since it was submitted, or rules on the amendments, accepting them or not by simple majority. The period of two months which the Senate has in order to veto or amend the bill is reduced to twenty calendar days in the case of bills declared to be urgent by the Government or by the Congress of Deputies.

The King sanctions Laws approved by the Cortes Generales within fifteen days, issues them and orders their immediate publication.

- Organic Law: The approval, modification or derogation of organic Laws requires an absolute majority of the Congress, at a final vote on the bill as a whole.

Regulation: regulations are issued in accordance with the following procedure:

- Regulations are initiated by the relevant policy-making department by preparing the corresponding bill, to which is attached a report on the need for and appropriateness of it, as well as a financial statement containing an estimate of the attendant cost.
- Throughout the preparation process it is necessary to obtain, in addition to the reports, opinions and prior prescriptive approvals, such studies and consultations as are deemed appropriate in order to ensure the impact and legality of the bill. In every case, regulations must be accompanied by a gender-impact report in respect of the measures set out therein.
- Where the provision affects the legitimate rights and interests of the people, they may be given a hearing, within a reasonable time-frame of no less than fifteen working days. Therefore, when the nature of the provision so requires, it is submitted to public consultation during the said period.
- In every case, draft regulations must be reported on by the Secretaría General Técnica (departmental secretariat), without prejudice to the ruling of the Council of State in those cases where this is legally required.
- It is necessary to inform the Ministerio de Política Territorial (ministry of regional policy) first where the regulation may affect the distribution of jurisdiction between the State and the Autonomous Communities.
- Before regulations approved by the Government can come into force, they must be published in full in the Official State Gazette.

Databases of legislation

The Official State Gazette has a database containing all legislation published since 1960: Iberlex.

Is access to the databases free of charge?

Access to this database is free of charge.

Short description of the contents

Gazettes published since 1960 can be consulted on the Official State Gazette's website.

There is a search engine for searching legislation and announcements, together with databases of Constitutional Case Law since 1980, CaseLaw of the Abogacía del Estado (State lawyers) (reports and rulings since 1997) and of the Council of State. Finally, it offers alerting services for legislative notifications, public announcements and information consultations and documentation.

Related Links

IBERLEX/ database of Spanish legislation

---

The national language version of this page is maintained by the respective Member State. The translations have been done by the European Commission service. Possible changes introduced in the original by the competent national authority may not be yet reflected in the translations. The European Commission accepts no responsibility or liability whatsoever with regard to any information or data contained or referred to in this document. Please refer to the legal notice to see copyright rules for the Member State responsible for this page.

Last update: 12/03/2019

Member State law - France

In this section you will find an overview of the different sources of law in France.

---

Sources of law

The law in France is essentially made up of written rules called sources of law. These can be rules adopted by States or between States at national level, but they also include case-law from national and international courts. In addition, they cover rules made at local level, such as municipal by-laws, or by professional and trade organisations, such as the College of Physicians, or rules established by citizens between themselves, such as collective agreements or contracts, and finally mere custom.

This collection is ordered in accordance with a hierarchy of rules. So, a new rule:

- must respect the previous, superior rules;
- may amend previous rules at the same level;
- repeals inferior, contradictory rules.

International sources of law

Treaties and international accords

A treaty only comes into force in France when it has been ratified or approved and then published. Some treaties are directly applicable in the French legal order, while others need to be transposed by an internal rule.

European Union law

The notion of European Union law refers to the rules made by the institutions of the European Community and the European Union. They can be recommendations, opinions, regulations, decisions or directives.

National sources of law

Constitutional rules

- the Constitution of 4 October 1958;

- the preamble to the Constitution of 27 October 1946, along with the Declaration of the Rights of Man and of the Citizen of 26 August 1789 and the fundamental principles recognised by the laws of the Republic to which they refer;
- the organic laws submitted to the Constitutional Council before their enactment, the purpose of which is to complement the Constitution.

Legislative rules

Legislation, passed by Parliament, is subordinate to the Constitution. When addressed, the Constitutional Council reviews the constitutionality of legislation before it is enacted, that is, it checks to see if it conforms to the Constitution. The Constitutional Council may also be addressed by the President of the Republic, the Prime Minister, the Presidents of the National Assembly and the Senate, or by 60 members or 60 senators.

In addition, the Council of State or Court of Cassation may refer a case to the Constitutional Council for a ruling on the constitutionality of an existing legislative provision. This happens in cases where a party to the legal proceedings to which the provision applies is contesting the legislation with a view to having it annulled on the basis that it infringes the rights and freedoms guaranteed by the Constitution.

Under Article 55 of the Constitution, international treaties ratified by France are superior to legislation. Courts from both the administrative and ordinary jurisdictions must refuse to apply legislation which appears to be incompatible with a treaty, whether it was ratified before or after the legislation.

Statutory instruments

1. Orders

Under Article 38 of the Constitution, in order to implement its programme, the Government may seek permission from Parliament for a limited period of time to take measures of a legislative nature. These orders have the rank of regulations until such time as they have been ratified by the legislature and may therefore be challenged in the the administrative courts pending their ratification.

3. Regulations

Regulations differ according to the authority which introduced them:

1. decrees from the President of the Republic or the Prime Minister (when they are adopted in the Council of Ministers or the Council of State they may only be amended under the same circumstances);
2. interministerial or ministerial orders;
3. regulatory decisions taken by authorities delegated by the State (prefect, mayor etc.) or decentralised authorities (municipality, département – similar to a county – or region).

4. Collective agreements

The Employment Code establishes the general rules governing employment conditions. In this context, social partners from the private sector (employers and trade unions) negotiate agreements and contracts. Thus collective agreements define employment conditions and guaranteed employment benefits for the employees of the organisations concerned (scrap and recycling trade and industries, homes for young workers, supplementary pension institutions, etc.). Collective accords, on the other hand, only concern a specific area (wages, working hours, etc.). Collective agreements and accords can be concluded at the level of a particular sector (all the businesses carrying on the same activity in a given territory), a particular business or a particular establishment. The collective agreement can be 'extended' by the Ministry of Employment, Social Affairs and the Solidarity Fund or the Ministry of Agriculture and Fisheries so that it applies to all the organisations in the target sector.

Case-law laid down by the ordinary and administrative courts

Case-law can be laid down by both the ordinary and administrative courts. Case-law laid down by the ordinary courts interprets the law but in principle applies only to the case before it. The case-law of administrative courts takes precedence over regulations in that it can annul a regulation, but ranks beneath statute law.

Institutional framework

The legislative process in France

It is important to distinguish between a government bill, the text of which is initiated by the government and which is presented to the Council of ministers by a minister, from a Parliamentary bill, the text of which is initiated by Parliament. The government bill must be lodged with the National Assembly or the Senate.

The bill is then examined by Parliament, and will be adopted if it has been approved in the same terms by both Chambers.

In the event of a disagreement between the two Chambers, a joint committee is convened. This committee is made up of seven members and seven senators and is given the task of proposing an agreed text, normally after two readings by each chamber. The government may expedite the procedure, however. If this happens, a joint committee may be set up after the first reading.

The act is promulgated (i.e. signed) by the President of the Republic within 15 days of the act being transmitted to the government after having been adopted by the Parliament. During this time, the President can request a new reading of the text, and the Constitutional Council may be consulted to verify whether it complies with the Constitution. The promulgated act comes into force after it has been published in the Official Journal.

Publication of acts and regulations

In order to have binding effect, acts and regulations must have been brought to the attention of the citizens. Individual measures must therefore be notified to people who are affected by them, which means that regulatory measures must be published.

The rules relating to legislative and regulatory texts coming into force were amended by Order no. 2004-164 of 20 February 2004 as of 1 June 2004. Now, Article 1 of the Civil Code provides that, unless otherwise stated, texts come into force the day after their publication in the Official Journal.

However, in emergencies, the following may come into force on the same day they are published: laws where their enacting decree have prescribed this, and administrative measures for which this has been preordained by the Government through a special provision.

Apart from decrees, regulatory provisions, introduced by the competent State authorities at national level (ministerial orders, measures taken by independent administrative authorities, etc.) are also published in the Official Journal. The orders of the ministries are often published, in addition, in the ministries' Official Gazettes.

For a regulatory provision to be published in just the Official Gazette, it must concern only a very specific category of citizens (essentially civil servants and agents of the ministry).

Measures taken by local authorities follow specific publications methods. They do not appear in the Official Journal.

Circulars or instructions do not as a general rule have any regulatory effect. These measures are limited to giving instructions to departments for the application of laws and decrees, or to clarify the interpretation of certain provisions.

In order to be applicable, they must have been published on the website of the Prime Minister's Office intended for this purpose (decree No 2008-1281 of 8 December 2008). The usual method is for them to be included in the ministries' Official Gazettes. Only the most important circulars are published in the Official Journal.

Legislation databanks

The public legal databases in France are covered by a public dissemination service over the Internet (SPDDI) under Decree no. 2002-1064 of 7 August 2002 (English version)

This system is explained in detail in the Fact sheet on reusing data available on Légifrance:

Légifrance contains the following:

- the codes, acts and regulations in their consolidated version ('Legi' database);
- the documents as they are published in the 'lois et décrets' (laws and decrees) edition of the Official Journal ('Jorf' database);
- the extended national collective agreements ('Kali' database);
- the decisions of the Constitutional Council ('Constiti' database);
- the decisions of the Court of Cassation and the Courts of Appeal ('Cass' database for decisions published in the Gazette, 'Inca' database for unpublished decisions, and 'Capp' database for decisions of the Court of Appeal);
- the decisions of the Conseil d'Etat and the Conflicts Court, the decisions of the Administrative Courts of Appeal and a selection of decisions from the Administrative Courts of First Instance ('Jade' database);

- the deliberations of the National Commission for Information Technology and Civil Liberties (CNIL) ('CNIL' database).

For reference purposes, other sites, accessible either directly or through Légifrance, take part in this service (SPDDI); they concern:

- the Court of Auditors for decisions from the financial courts,
- each Ministry for its Official Gazette,
- the Directorate General for Taxes for tax documentation,
- the Ministry of Foreign and European Affairs for international conventions ('Pact' database).

Information relating to the terms and conditions for retrieving and reusing data concerning the second category above is available on each site.

It is also possible to find a Catalogue of the databases listed above on the Légifrance site.

The list of Légifrance licence tariffs is also available.

Databases

The following is a non-exhaustive list of legal databases:

- The LEGI database contains codes, acts and regulations in their consolidated version;
- The JORF database contains documents as they are published in the 'lois et décrets' (laws and decrees) edition of the Official Journal;
- The KALI database contains the extended national collective agreements;
- The CONSTIT database contains the decisions of the Constitutional Council;
- The JADE database contains the decisions of the Conseil d'Etat and the Conflicts Court, the decisions of the Administrative Courts of Appeal and a selection of decisions from the Administrative Courts of First Instance;
  - The CNIL database contains the deliberations of CNIL (the National Commission for Information Technology and Civil Liberties).

The case-law of the Court of Cassation is available on its website.

There is an online service for ordering the decisions of the Court of Cassation, and some decisions of the Court of Cassation are translated into English, Arabic and Mandarin.

---

The national language version of this page is maintained by the respective Member State. The translations have been done by the European Commission service. Possible changes introduced in the original by the competent national authority may not be yet reflected in the translations. The European Commission accepts no responsibility or liability whatsoever with regard to any information or data contained or referred to in this document. Please refer to the legal notice to see copyright rules for the Member State responsible for this page.

Last update: 13/12/2016

Member State law - Croatia

The language version you are now viewing is currently being prepared by our translators. Please note that the following languages: hr have already been translated.

Constitution of the Republic of Croatia

Constitution of the Republic of Croatia

The Constitution of the Republic of Croatia of 22 December 1990 (hereinafter referred to as the 'Constitution of 1990'), by adopting the new constitutional order of 1990, defined the composition of the Constitutional Court of the Republic of Croatia (hereinafter 'Constitutional Court') and the nature and limits of its powers.

Under the 1990 Constitution:

- The Constitutional Court comprises 11 judges elected by the House of Representatives, on the basis of a proposal from the House of Counties of the Parliament of the Republic of Croatia, for a term of eight years from among outstanding legal experts, especially judges, public prosecutors, barristers/solicitors and university professors of law;
- The Constitutional Court elects a president of the Court for a term of four years; Judges of the Constitutional Court may not perform any other public or professional duty;
- Judges of the Constitutional Court enjoy the same immunity as members of the Croatian Parliament;
- A judge of the Constitutional Court may be relieved of office before the expiry of the term for which he/she was elected if he/she so requests, if he/she is sentenced to a term of imprisonment, or if the Constitutional Court itself finds that he/she is permanently incapacitated for performing his/her duty.

Under the Constitution of 1990, the basic powers of the Constitutional Court were as follows:

- to decide on the conformity of laws with the Constitution and to strike them down if it finds them to be unconstitutional;
- to decide on the conformity of other legislation with the Constitution and the law and to strike down or annul any other legislation that it finds to be unconstitutional or illegal;
- to protect the constitutional human and citizens' freedoms and rights in proceedings instituted by a constitutional complaint;
- to rule on jurisdictional disputes between legislative, executive and judicial bodies;
- to supervise the constitutionality of the programmes and activities of political parties and possibly to ban their work if their programme or activities threaten violence against the democratic constitutional order, independence, unity or territorial integrity of the Republic of Croatia;
- to supervise the constitutionality and legality of elections and republican referendums and to resolve electoral disputes which do not fall within the jurisdiction of the courts;
- at the proposal of the Government of the Republic of Croatia, to establish that the President of the Republic is permanently unable to perform his/her duties, in which case the duties of the President of the Republic are temporarily assumed by the President of the Croatian Parliament;
- in proceedings instituted by a two-thirds majority vote of all representatives of the House of Representatives of the Croatian Parliament, to decide by a two-thirds majority vote of all the judges on the impeachment of the President of the Republic. If the Constitutional Court upholds the impeachment, the duty of the President of the Republic ceases by force of the Constitution.

The Constitution of 1990 also provided that a constitutional act was to regulate the conditions for the election of judges of the Constitutional Court and the termination of their term of office, the conditions and time-limits for instituting proceedings for the review of constitutionality and legality, the procedure and legal effects of its decisions, the protection of constitutional freedoms and human and citizens' rights, and other issues of importance for the performance of the duties and work of the Constitutional Court, and that this constitutional act was to be passed by the procedure laid down for amending the Constitution.

Since 1990 no law in the constitutional order of the Republic of Croatia, apart from the Constitutional Act on the Constitutional Court of the Republic of Croatia, has had to be passed by the procedure established for the Constitution itself, i.e. to which the Constitution grants constitutional force. This is a clear expression of the importance and role of constitutional review in the legal order of the Republic of Croatia.

In accordance with the Constitution of 1990, in March 1991 the Croatian Parliament passed the first Constitutional Act on the Constitutional Court of the Republic of Croatia (hereinafter 'Constitutional Act of 1991'), which further develops the powers of the Constitutional Court specified by the Constitution of 1990.

The first change of the Constitution of 1990 took place at the end of 1997, when the Constitutional Act amending and supplementing the Constitution of the Republic of Croatia was passed. None of the provisions of the Constitution of 1990 regulating the powers of the Constitutional Court were changed or supplemented by these amendments and additions. In September 1999 Parliament passed a new Constitutional Act on the Constitutional Court of the Republic of Croatia (hereinafter 'Constitutional Act of 1999').

The second change of the Constitution took place at the end of 2000 when the Change of the Constitution of the Republic of Croatia was passed. In these changes to the Constitution the powers of the Constitutional Court were considerably expanded, and the number of judges was increased from the original 11 to a total of 13. In addition to the powers already established in the Constitution of 1990, the Constitutional Court was given the following new powers:

- to review the constitutionality of a law, and the constitutionality and legality of other regulations which are no longer in force, provided that no more than one year has elapsed between the date when they ceased to be in force and the date when the request or proposal to initiate proceedings was lodged;
- to monitor the implementation of constitutionality and legality and to report to the House of Representatives of the Croatian Parliament about any kind of unconstitutionality and illegality it has observed;
- if it finds that a competent body has not issued a regulation for executing provisions of the Constitution, laws and other regulations when it was obliged to do so, the Constitutional Court must inform the Government of the Republic of Croatia thereof and, in the case of regulations that should have been issued by the Government, it must inform the House of Representatives of the Croatian Parliament thereof;
- to adopt, at the proposal of the Government of the Republic of Croatia, a decision whereby the President of the Croatian Parliament assumes the duties of temporary President of the Republic should the President of the Republic be prevented from performing his/her duties for a significant period of time because of illness or incapacity, and particularly if he/she is unable to decide on delegating his/her duties to a temporary substitute;
- to give prior consent for the detention or institution of criminal proceedings against the President of the Republic;
- to decide on an appeal against a decision of the National Judicial Council on relieving a judge of judicial office, and to decide on an appeal against a decision of the National Judicial Council on the disciplinary responsibility of a judge, both within 30 days of the submission of the appeal (the decision excludes the right to a constitutional complaint).

The third change of the Constitution of 1990 took place at the beginning of 2001. These changes did not amend or supplement the constitutional provisions of 2000, which had substantially extended the powers of the Constitutional Court in comparison to its powers under the Constitution of 1990. They merely brought the existing terminology in the part of the Constitution relevant to the Constitutional Court into line with the terminology in the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms. Moreover, in the existing provisions of the Constitution relevant to the Constitutional Court, all references to the House of Representatives and the House of Counties of the Croatian Parliament were removed because the changes to the Constitution in 2001 reorganised the national parliament into one sole chamber (the House of Counties was abolished, and the provisions referring to the House of Representatives were replaced by provisions referring to the Croatian Parliament).

In March 2002 the Constitutional Act Amending and Supplementing the Constitutional Act on the Constitutional Court of the Republic of Croatia was passed, bringing the text of the Constitutional Act of 1999 into line with the extended powers of the Constitutional Court established by the Change of the Constitution of 2000. This is still in force.

Constitutional review was introduced in the Republic of Croatia in 1963, and the Constitutional Court began operating in 1964.

Constitutional review in the Republic of Croatia can be divided up into two historical periods:

constitutional review in the former Socialist Republic of Croatia from 1963 to 1990 – the period in which Croatia was one of the six federal entities (republics) which constituted the former Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (hereinafter 'former SFRY'); constitutional review in the Republic of Croatia from 1990 to the present day – the period after the Republic of Croatia became autonomous and independent.

Most important criminal law legislation

 Criminal law:

Criminal Code

Criminal Procedure Act

Misdemeanours Act

Juvenile Courts Act

Protection of People with Mental Disorders Act

Act on No Statute of Limitations for Wartime Profiteering, Economic Transition and Privatisation Crimes

Financial Compensation for Victims of Criminal Offences Act

Liability of Legal Persons for Criminal Offences Act

Amnesty Act

Procedure for Confiscation of Proceeds of Criminal Acts and Misdemeanours Act

Legal Consequences of Sentences, Criminal Records and Rehabilitation Act

Probation Act

Most important civil, commercial and administrative law legislation

Civil law:

Enforcement Act

Arbitration Act

Free Legal Aid Act

Validation Act

Conciliation Act

Succession Act

Civil Obligations Act

Civil Procedure Act

Ownership and Other Real Rights Act

Lease and Purchase of Business Premises Act

Land Register Act

Act on Liability of Republic of Croatia for Damage caused in Former Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (SFRY) for which Former SFRY was Responsible

Act on Liability of Republic of Croatia for Damage caused by Members of Croatian Armed Forces and Law and Order Forces during Croatian Independence War

Act on Liability for Damage caused by Terrorist Acts and Public Demonstrations

Act on Prohibition of Transfer of Right of Disposal and Use of Certain Publicly Owned Immovable Property to Other Users or into Ownership of Natural and Legal Persons

Act denying Certain Legal Persons the Right to Dispose and Take Possession of Assets in the Republic of Croatia

Act on the Resolution of Conflicts of Laws with the Regulations of Other Countries in Specific Relations

Commercial law:

Bankruptcy Act

Corporations Act

Court Register Act

Introduction of European Company (SE) and European Economic Interest Grouping (EEIG) Act

Administrative law:

Expropriation Act

Expropriation and Award of Compensation Act

Administrative Disputes Act

The national language version of this page is maintained by the respective Member State. The translations have been done by the European Commission service. Possible changes introduced in the original by the competent national authority may not be yet reflected in the translations. The European Commission accepts no responsibility or liability whatsoever with regard to any information or data contained or referred to in this document. Please refer to the legal notice to see copyright rules for the Member State responsible for this page.

Last update: 22/08/2016

Member State law - Italy

This page provides you with information on the legal system in Italy.

---

Sources of law

In Italy, as in every modern democracy, the political system is based on the separation of powers between the legislature, the executive and the judiciary.

Italian sources of law are usually provided by the legislature, which the executive enforces. The judiciary intervenes where laws are breached.

Types of legal instruments – description

The sources of law in Italy are, in order of importance:

- The Constitution
- The laws (codes and other parliamentary laws, regional laws)
- Regulations
- Customary law

A referendum can be a source of law, if it abrogates (repeals) an earlier law.

Law is open to interpretation and jurisprudence can influence subsequent decisions. However, jurisprudence is not strictly binding as Italy has a civil law system, where positive, written law is the main guide for interpreters.

The Constitution is the principle source of law. It is framed by a constituent power and can be amended only by a special proceeding – more complex than that required to modify ordinary laws.

Parliamentary laws are the result of consideration by both the Camera dei Deputati (low chamber) and the Senato (high chamber) and must be enforced and respected all over Italy. This excludes special laws adopted for specific territories or events – as, for instance, in response to an earthquake.

Regional laws have force only in the territory of the region concerned, and can rule only on specific issues.

In some matters, regional laws may be integrated into state laws (if existent) or may become exclusive (in the absence of a national regulation) – as for commerce, education, scientific research, sport, ports and airports, working safety and cultural goods.

Regulations consist of submitted instruments of rules, with details about the enforcement of laws, both national and regional.

Hierarchy of norms

The Italian judicial system complies with international and communitarian rules, both customary and written.

There is a hierarchy of sources of law. According to the rule of law, a law should not contradict the Constitution and a sub-legislative Act should not contradict a legislative source.

Institutional framework

Institutions responsible for the adoption of legal rules

Usually, the institutions responsible for the adoption of legal rules are the parliament and the regional councils.

In special circumstances, the government can adopt laws (with subsequent confirmation/modification by the parliament). This can be done in cases of urgency, or where the parliament has delegated the power.

Regulations are normally issued by the government or the regional councils, with details about the application of laws.

Decision - making process

The normal process of adopting a law consists of three phases:

- Initiation: This prerogative belongs to the government, every member of the parliament, groups of voters (citizens), regional councils and some special institutions
- Discussion and voting: This can be done in many different ways, depending on the internal rules of the parliament:
- Promulgation and publication: Consists of a proclamation by the President of Italian Republic and publication in the official gazette.

Legal databases

The Normattiva project was launched in March 2010 to promote the computerisation and classification of the State and regional provisions in force by public administrations, to facilitate free searches and consultation of these provisions by citizens and to provide instruments for legislative review, which is the responsibility of the Prime Minister's Office, the Senate of the Republic and the Chamber of Deputies.

The documents in the "Normattiva" database can be consulted in three forms:

- the original version published in the Italian Official Journal;
- the version in force and applicable on the date of consultation of the database and
- the version in force on any given prior date specified by the user.

When complete, the database will comprise the entire corpus of State law in the form of numbered acts (laws, decree laws, legislative decrees and other numbered acts).

At present it contains approximately 75 000 acts, all adopted in or since 1946.

It does not include ministerial decrees.

The project is still at the development phase. In future:

- it will be possible to navigate the entire database via dynamic links from the amended provision to the relevant Article in the next amending act;
- the search function will be upgraded to include searches "by concept" as well as by semantic category;
- all the legislative acts published when Italy was a Kingdom (1861-1946) will be recovered and made available;
- it will contain links to all the other public legislative databases, starting with those containing regional laws and Community legislation.

---

The national language version of this page is maintained by the respective Member State. The translations have been done by the European Commission service. Possible changes introduced in the original by the competent national authority may not be yet reflected in the translations. The European Commission accepts no responsibility or liability whatsoever with regard to any information or data contained or referred to in this document. Please refer to the legal notice to see copyright rules for the Member State responsible for this page.

Last update: 18/06/2018

Member State law - Cyprus

According to Article 1 of the Constitution (Σύνταγμα) 'The State of Cyprus is an independent and sovereign Republic with a presidential regime', based on the principles of legality, the division of authority (executive, legislature and judiciary), the impartiality of the judiciary and respect for and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms.

Human rights and fundamental freedoms are safeguarded under Part II of the Constitution, which mirrors the European Convention on Human Rights (ECHR) (Ευρωπαϊκή Σύμβαση Ανθρωπίνων Δικαιωμάτων) (Ε.Σ.Α.Δ.) and, under Article 35 of the Constitution, 'The legislative, executive and judicial authorities of the Republic shall be bound to secure, within the limits of their respective competence, the efficient application of the provisions of this Part'.

Legality is safeguarded not only by the written Constitution and provisions of law, but also by the fact that the government undertakes to respect the constitutional limits imposed on it and to ensure that the legislature passes constitutional laws and that there is an independent and impartial judiciary.

---

Sources of law

1. European Union law

Cyprus became a fully-fledged and equal Member State of the European Union on 1 May 2004 and is subject to EU law. According to the case-law of the Court of Justice of the European Union (Δικαστήριο της Ευρωπαϊκής Ένωσης), EU law takes precedence over the national law of the Member States, including both domestic laws and the Constitution.

The supremacy of EU law over the Constitution of the Republic of Cyprus is safeguarded under the Constitution of the Republic of Cyprus, which was amended in the Law relating to the Fifth Amendment of the Constitution (Ο περί της Πέμπτης Τροποποίησης του Συντάγματος Νόμος) (Law 127(I)/2006) in order to clarify the supremacy and precedence of EU law over the Constitution.

The Republic of Cyprus has also adapted and harmonised its national laws with EU law by enacting numerous legislative acts and, at the same time, repealing or amending various provisions of national law, including the provisions of the Constitution, as described above.

EU law is therefore the source of law which has supremacy in the Republic of Cyprus and includes both the rules adopted by the Member States, i.e. the Treaties establishing the European Community and their protocols and annexes, as subsequently supplemented or amended, and the rules issued by the institutions of the European Union in the form of Regulations, Directives or Decisions. It also includes the rules of international conventions entered into between the EU and third countries or international organisations, general and fundamental principles of law, common law, the general rules of public international law and the case-law of the Court of Justice of the European Union, according to which, as general principles of law, fundamental human rights form an integral part of the European acquis.

2. The Constitution of the Republic of Cyprus

The Constitution of the Republic of Cyprus was adopted in 1960, when the Republic of Cyprus was declared and, according to Article 179 of the Constitution, it constitutes the supreme law of the Republic of Cyprus. Following the accession of the Republic of Cyprus to the European Union and amendment of its Constitution as described in paragraph 1 above, EU law takes precedence over the internal constitutional order and rules of law contained in the Constitution must be in keeping with EU law.

3. International Conventions / Treaties / Agreements

Under Article 169 of the Constitution, once international conventions, treaties or agreements entered into by decision of the Ministerial Council have been ratified by law and published in the Government Gazette, they have supremacy over any national law (with the exception of the Constitution) and, in the event of conflict with such laws, they take precedence, provided that they are similarly applied by the counterparty.

4. Formal laws

Formal laws are the laws passed by the House of Representatives (Βουλή των Αντιπροσώπων), which exercises legislative power, and they must be in keeping with both EU law and the Constitution.

Under the provisions of Article 188 of the Constitution, the laws which apply in the Republic of Cyprus today are the laws which were on the statute book pursuant to that article on the eve of Independence Day, unless some other provision has been or will be made pursuant to a law which applies or is passed pursuant to the Constitution and the laws passed by the House of Representatives (Βουλή των Αντιπροσώπων) after independence.

5. Regulatory acts

Regulatory acts are legislative acts issued by the executive pursuant to statutory powers vested in them and must be in keeping both with EU law and the Constitution and laws.

These powers of the administration to enact additional rules of law (secondary legislation), which are needed in order to apply and execute a law, are known as regulatory powers and, although legislative powers in Cyprus are vested in the House of Representatives, they are allowed so that specific issues or issues of local interest or technical or detailed issues can be regulated.

6. Case law of the Supreme Court (Ανώτατο Δικαστήριο)

The doctrine that applies in Cyprus is that judgments handed down by the Supreme Court are binding on all the lower courts. Therefore, a judgment by the Supreme Court interpreting a rule of law is construed as a source of law.

7. Common law – Principles of equity

Common law (κοινοδίκαιο) and the principles of equity (επιείκεια) are also sources of law in cases in which there is no other legislative provision.

Types of legal instruments – description

Written

1. The Constitution of the Republic of Cyprus
2. The international conventions/treaties/agreements entered into with third countries, ratified by law and published in the Government Gazette of the Republic, which take precedence over any national law, provided that they are similarly applied by the counterparty.
3. The laws in force pursuant to Article 188 of the Constitution on the eve of Independence Day in accordance with the provisions thereof, unless some other provision has been or will be made pursuant to a law applicable or passed pursuant to the Constitution. Laws passed by the House of Representatives after independence.
4. Regulatory acts (Κανονιστικές Πράξεις) (Regulations) (Κανονισμοί).

Unwritten

1. Case-law of the Supreme Court, the Court of Justice of the European Union and the Court of Human Rights.
2. Common law and the principles of equity, unless some other provision has been or will be made pursuant to a law applicable or passed under the Constitution.

Hierarchy of norms

Following the accession of the Republic of Cyprus to the European Union, the hierarchy of norms in the Republic of Cyprus is as follows:

1. EUROPEAN UNION LAW
2. THE CONSTITUTION OF THE REPUBLIC OF CYPRUS
3. INTERNATIONAL CONVENTIONS/TREATIES/AGREEMENTS
4. FORMAL LAWS
5. REGULATORY ACTS
6. SUPREME COURT CASE LAW
7. COMMON LAW AND PRINCIPLES OF EQUITY

Common law and the principles of equity are a source of Cypriot law and are applied in cases in which there is no other legislative provision/institutional framework.

Institutions responsible for the adoption of legal rules

The Constitution of the Republic of Cyprus makes a clear distinction between three estates. Executive powers are exercised by the President, the Vice-President and the Ministerial Council, judicial powers are exercised by the courts of the Republic and legislative powers are exercised by the House of Representatives, which is the supreme legislative body of the Republic. Although the House of Representatives is the supreme legislative body, the executive has the facility to lay down the rules of law needed for the purpose of applying a law and to respond to the numerous instances in which it may need to be applied. These powers vested in the administration to enact additional rules of law needed for the application and execution of a law are known as regulatory powers.

Decision-making process

The procedure for passing a law commences when a proposal for a bill or a bill is tabled. The right to table a proposal for a bill is vested in the Representatives and the right to table a bill is vested in the ministers. All bills and all proposals for bills tabled before the House of Representatives are initially referred for debate by the competent parliamentary committee and then for debate by plenary.

Laws and resolutions by the House of Representatives are passed by simple majority of the representatives present and voting and, once they have been passed, are notified to the Office of the President of the Republic, who either issues them by promulgating them in the Government Gazette of the Republic or refers them back to the House for re-examination, in which case, if the House abides by its decision, the President must issue the law in question, unless he exercises his constitutional right of referral to the Supreme Court so that it can rule on whether or not the law is in keeping with the Constitution or EU law. If the Court rules that it is, then it is promulgated immediately and if not, then it is not promulgated.

Laws enter the statute book on promulgation in the Government Gazette of the Republic or on the date stipulated in the law and may be repealed by another law or tacitly under certain circumstances.

Legal databases

The following legal databases are available in the Republic of Cyprus:

1. CYLAW
2. THE CYPRUS LEGAL PORTAL \(ΝΟΜΙΚΟΣ ΚΟΜΒΟΣ ΣΤΟ ΔΙΑΔΙΚΤΥΟ\)

Is access to databases free?

Access to CYLAW is free. The CYPRUS LEGAL PORTAL is only accessible to subscribers.

Brief description

1. CYLAW

CyLaw was set up in January 2002 as a not-for-profit database to provide free and independent legal information on and access to sources of Cypriot law as part of the international movement for free access to the law of which it is a member. The CyLaw databases contain judgments handed down by the Supreme Court and second instance Family Court since 1997, the rules of civil procedure and a number of legal articles and texts.

The judgments contained in the CyLaw database were recorded in electronic format by the Supreme Court. The texts of the judgments it contains are the authentic texts, as pronounced by the Supreme Court without any interference or correction.

2. Cyprus Legal Portal

The Cyprus Legal Portal provides easy access, among other things, to news articles, texts and articles of immediate interest to anyone involved in legal issues and access to a subscriber legal database containing the 'Legislation' ('Νομοθεσία') and 'Case Law' ('Νομολογία') databases of the Republic of Cyprus.

The Directory of Laws (Ευρετήριο των Νόμων) contains a directory of all laws either on the statute book or repealed and a directory of all related regulations. These directories are constantly updated when the Government Gazette is published.

The Directory of Case Law (Ευρετήριο της Νομολογίας) has the facility to search for the text of any decision on the basis of various search criteria.

Related Links

Law Office (Law Office)

Supreme Court

House of Representatives (Βουλή των Αντιπροσώπων)

---

The national language version of this page is maintained by the respective Member State. The translations have been done by the European Commission service. Possible changes introduced in the original by the competent national authority may not be yet reflected in the translations. The European Commission accepts no responsibility or liability whatsoever with regard to any information or data contained or referred to in this document. Please refer to the legal notice to see copyright rules for the Member State responsible for this page.

Member State law - Latvia

The language version you are now viewing is currently being prepared by our translators. Please note that the following languages: lv have already been translated.

This page provides you with information on the legal system in Latvia.

---

Sources of law

Latvia has a continental European legal system. Its most important source of law is written legislation.

Legislation

Relationships between bodies established under public law and private individuals or other right-holders are governed by legislation (ārējie normatīvie akti).

Types of legislation, in descending order of legal status:

- the Constitution of the Republic of Latvia;
- statute: laws enacted by Parliament;
- Cabinet regulations;
- regulations of the Bank of Latvia, the Financial and Capital Market Commission and the Public Utilities Commission (in the Latvian legal system these regulations have the same status as regulations issued by the Cabinet);
- binding local government regulations.

Provisions of European Union law are applied in accordance with their position in the hierarchy of legislative acts. When applying provisions of EU law, authorities and courts must also take into account the case-law of the Court of Justice.

Provisions of international law are applied irrespective of their source in accordance with their position in the hierarchy of legislative acts. If a provision of international law and a provision of Latvian law with the same status in the hierarchy are found to be incompatible, the provision of international law is applied.

Statutes and Cabinet Regulations are binding throughout Latvia, and no-one may plead ignorance thereof. Ignorance of statutes and Cabinet Regulations does not release anyone from the duty and responsibility to comply with them.

Binding local government regulations are binding on all private individuals and legal persons within the relevant administrative area.

The entities entitled to issue legislative acts are:

- the people of Latvia when they exercise legislative powers (one tenth of all electors may submit draft legislation to the Parliament; the people may also take part in referenda);
- the Saeima (Parliament) has power to pass statutes;
- the Cabinet has power to make regulations where so authorised by statute;
- the Bank of Latvia, the Finance and Capital Market Commission and the Public Utilities Commission likewise have power to make regulations where so authorised by statute;
- local authorities have power to make regulations where so authorised by statute.

Internal public rules

Internal public rules (iekšējie normatīvie akti) are made by a body governed by public law with the purpose of establishing procedures for its own internal operations or those of bodies subordinate to it, or to clarify the procedure for applying general legislation within its own scope of operations. Internal public rules are not binding on private individuals. If a body adopts a decision with regard to a private individual, it may not refer in that decision to an internal public rule.

Types of internal public rules are:

- the constitution of a body (nolikums), which determines its internal structure and organisation;

- internal rules of procedure (reglaments): these lay down the structure of a body's internal units and their operations;
- recommendations (ieteikumi): these establish procedures for the exercise of the discretion granted under legislation and internal public rules by providing for a uniform course of action in similar circumstances— in certain situations recommendations may be disregarded if there is sufficient justification for doing so;
- instructions (instrukcija): these determine how general legislation and general legal principles are to be applied;
- internal regulations (iekšējie noteikumi): these determine the procedure for adopting administrative decisions, how administrative officials and other personnel are to perform their duties, rules of conduct, safety at work and other matters relating to the operations of the institution in question.

All types of internal public rules have the same legal status. If internal public rules are found to be incompatible with one another, the act issued by the highest-ranking authority or official is applied.

The entities entitled to issue internal public rules are:

- the Cabinet;
- a member of the Cabinet;
- a governing body of a public entity;
- the head of an authority.

Sources of law: classes

The sources of law can be divided into the following classes:

- laws and regulations (normatīvie akti): legal acts that lay down legal rules, bring them into effect, or amend them or repeal them; laws and regulations may be classified as legislation or internal public rules;
- general principles of law: written (contained in statute and regulations) or unwritten basic rules governing objective legality in social life;
- customary law: rules of conduct that have developed as a result of actual application over an historical time-frame; customary law is applied when developing rights and interpreting provisions of law if the issue in question is not governed by statute or other legislation;
- case-law: the body of court rulings containing correct and valuable abstract legal findings which can be used by judges in other cases as reasoning for their own rulings;
- learned writing (doktrīna): the body of established academic opinion providing an interpretation of provisions of law, their origins and their application; learned writing is widely referred to in the grounds of rulings by courts and public administrative bodies.

Hierarchy of sources of law

Primary sources of law

- laws and regulations: these are the sources of law with the highest legal status; they are applied in accordance with their position in the hierarchy of legislative acts;
- general principles of law: this source of law is applied if the matter in question is not governed by statute or regulation; general principles of law are also used in the interpretation of laws and regulations; there is no hierarchy among general legal principles: they each have the same status in law;
- customary law: this is applied when developing rights and interpreting provisions of law if the matter in question is not governed by statute or other legislation.

Secondary sources of law

- case-law: court judgments that, in accordance with the procedural rules are binding on courts that hear claims; these judgments have the force of law, are binding on all parties and must be accorded the same respect as statute law

Judgments of the Constitutional Court are binding on all State and local authorities, institutions and officials, including courts, and on both natural and legal persons. A provision of law (or act) deemed by the Constitutional Court to be inconsistent with a provision of law of higher legal status is considered null and void from the date of publication of the Constitutional Court judgment, unless the Constitutional Court rules otherwise.

If the Constitutional Court deems an international agreement signed or concluded by Latvia to be unconstitutional, the Cabinet is obliged to arrange for the agreement to be amended, denounced, its operations to be suspended or accession to the agreement to be withdrawn.

If a decision of the Constitutional Court that puts an end to a case contains an interpretation of a provision of law, the interpretation is binding on all State and local authorities, institutions and officials, courts, and natural and legal persons.

- learned writing is extensively referred to in the reasoning of court rulings and the decisions of public administrative bodies; legal writing has no legal force, nor is it universally applicable.

Institutional framework

Entities entitled to enact legislation

The right to legislate is held by the Saeima and the people of Latvia with the right to participate in referenda.

The Cabinet may issue legislation in the form of regulations (noteikumi) in the following cases:

- on the basis of an authorisation laid down by statute;
- to approve an international agreement or draft thereof, denounce an international agreement or suspend its operations, unless the Constitution or the law provides otherwise;
- if necessary for the application of European Union legislative acts and if the issue in question has not been regulated by statute; these regulations may not impinge on the fundamental rights of private individuals.

The Bank of Latvia, the Finance and Capital Market Commission and the Public Utilities Commission may enact legislation (regulations, noteikumi) only on the basis of an authorisation laid down by statute, and within the scope of its remit.

Local authorities may enact legislation (binding regulations) on the basis of statutes or Cabinet Regulations.

Process of drawing up new laws and regulations

This section provides a brief overview of the procedures for drawing up new legislation.

Statute

Tabling of draft legislation in Parliament

Draft legislation may be submitted to Parliament by the President, the Cabinet, parliamentary committees, no less than five Members of Parliament or, in cases and in accordance with procedures provided for in the Constitution, one tenth of all voters.

Examination and adoption of draft legislation in Parliament

Parliament examines draft legislation in three readings. Draft legislation judged to be urgent, the draft State Budget, amendments to the State Budget and draft legislation providing for the adoption of international agreements is adopted at second reading.

Draft legislation is deemed to have been adopted and becomes law if it has been examined in three readings or, in the cases referred to above, it has been examined in two readings and, when the draft is put to a vote, it is supported by the absolute majority of votes of the Members of Parliament present.

Promulgation of laws

All laws adopted are sent by the Steering Committee (Prezidijs) of the Saeima to the President for promulgation.

The President promulgates laws adopted by the Saeima no earlier than the tenth day and no later than the twenty-first day after their adoption. The law enters into force on the fourteenth day after its promulgation (publication) in Latvijas Vēstnesis, the official gazette, unless the law provides for a different deadline.

Right to suspend promulgation of a law

The President has the power to request reconsideration of a law or to postpone its publication for up to two months.

The President exercises the right to request reconsideration of a law at his or her own initiative, but can only postpone publication of a law if so requested by no less than a third of all Members of Parliament. The President or a third of all Members of Parliament can exercise the abovementioned rights within ten days of adoption of the law by the Saeima.

A law suspended in accordance with the above procedure is referred for a vote to a national referendum, if this is requested by no less than a tenth of all voters during the signature collection procedure. However, if no such request is received within two months, the law is published. A referendum is not held if the Saeima votes on the law in question once again and at least three quarters of all Members of Parliament vote to adopt it.

A law adopted by the Saeima and suspended by the President may be repealed by referendum if at least half of all voters who participated in the previous Saeima elections take part in the referendum and the majority of them vote in favour of repealing the law.

Not all laws can be put to a referendum, however. The Budget and laws on loans, taxes, Customs, railway tariffs, military service, the declaration and initiation of war, the conclusion of a peace treaty, the declaration and repeal of a state of emergency, mobilisation and demobilisation and agreements with foreign countries may not be put to a referendum.

Entry into force of a law

A law enters into force on the fourteenth day following its publication in Latvijas Vēstnesis, unless the law specifies another deadline. The time limit for entry into force of a law begins the day following publication of that law.

Cancellation of a statute

A statute ceases to be in force in the following circumstances:

- upon entry into force of a statute repealing the earlier statute;
- upon entry into force of a transitional provision of another statute which provides that the earlier statute is repealed;
- upon entry into force of a judgment of the Constitutional Court which annuls the relevant law;
- in the case of a law adopted for a limited time period, when the period for which the law was intended to be in force expires.

Cabinet Regulations

Submission of a draft Cabinet Regulation to the Cabinet

A draft Regulation drawn up by a Ministry, the State Chancellery or a public administrative body answerable to the Prime Minister may be submitted to the Cabinet by a member of the Cabinet.

A draft Regulation drawn up by another State or local authority, NGO or social partner organisation may be submitted to the Cabinet by the head of the relevant body or via the member of the Cabinet politically responsible for the relevant area, sector or subsector.

Examination and adoption of a draft Cabinet Regulation

Draft Cabinet Regulations submitted to the Cabinet are notified and discussed at meetings of State Secretaries. Once a draft Cabinet Regulation has been notified, it is sent to the relevant Ministries for their approval and, if necessary, to other relevant institutions. The Ministry of Justice and Ministry of Finance give their opinion on all draft legislation. NGO representatives may also submit their opinions during the approval process.

Draft Regulations which have been agreed upon are examined at a meeting of the Cabinet, whereas those on which agreement has not been reached are discussed at a meeting of the Cabinet Committee. Any projects agreed upon at the Cabinet Committee meeting are referred to a meeting of the Cabinet for further consideration. If the Cabinet meeting endorses the draft Regulation, it is deemed to have been adopted and becomes a Cabinet Regulation.

Promulgation of Cabinet Regulations

Cabinet Regulations are promulgated by publication in Latvijas Vēstnesis, the official gazette.

Entry into force of Cabinet Regulations

Cabinet Regulations enter into force on the day following their publication in Latvijas Vēstnesis, unless they specify otherwise.

Cancellation of Cabinet Regulations

Cabinet Regulations cease to be in force in the following circumstances:

- upon entry into force of a Cabinet Regulation repealing the earlier Cabinet Regulation;

- upon entry into force of a provision of the closing provisions of a Cabinet Regulation which repeals the earlier Cabinet Regulation;
- if the provision of a law on the basis of which the Cabinet Regulation was issued ceases to be in force;
- upon entry into force of a judgment of the Constitutional Court which annuls the relevant Cabinet Regulation;
- in the case of a Cabinet Regulation adopted for a limited time, if the period for which the Cabinet Regulation was intended to be in force expires.

Regulations of the Bank of Latvia, Finance and Capital Market Commission and Public Utilities Commission

The procedure for the promulgation, entry into force and cancellation of regulations of the Bank of Latvia, the Finance and Capital Market Commission and the Public Utilities Commission is equivalent to the procedures for the promulgation, entry into force and cancellation of Cabinet Regulations.

Binding local government regulations

Submission of draft binding local government regulations to a local council

Draft binding local government regulations may be submitted to a local council by the Chair of the Council, the Council Committee, the Members of the Council, the initiator of an extraordinary meeting or the head of a city, town or civil parish administration.

Examination and adoption of draft binding local government regulations

Draft binding local government regulations are adopted and become binding if more than half of the members of the local council present vote in favour, unless otherwise provided by statute.

The council sends the regulations and an explanatory memorandum to the Ministry of Environmental Protection and Regional Development in written and electronic form within three days of the date of signature. The Ministry evaluates the legality of the regulations within a month of receiving them and sends the local council its opinion.

If the opinion of the Ministry contains no objections with regard to the legality of the regulations, or no opinion is sent to the local council within the specified time limit, the local council issues the binding regulations as adopted.

If an opinion from the Ministry is received which finds that the regulations are illegal in whole or in part, the local council makes improvements to the regulations in line with the opinion and issues amended regulations. If the local council does not agree with the opinion in whole or in part, it provides justification for this in its decision and issues the regulations. The regulations are sent to the Ministry of Environmental Protection and Regional Development in written and electronic form within three days of the date on which they are signed.

Promulgation of binding local government regulations

The local council promulgates the binding regulations by publishing them in a local newspaper or free publication. A city council (Re publikas pilsētas dome) promulgates binding regulations by publishing them in Latvijas Vēstnesis, the official gazette of Latvia. The explanatory memorandum is published along with the regulations.

Once they have entered into force, the regulations are published on the internet on the local authority's website. Binding regulations of municipal councils (novada domes) are also made available in the municipal council building and in civil parish or city administrative offices.

The Ministry of Environmental Protection and Regional Development publishes binding local government regulations on its website.

Entry into force of binding local government regulations

Binding regulations enter into force on the day following their publication in a newspaper or free publication, unless they specify a later date of entry into force.

Cancellation of binding local government regulations

Binding local government regulations cease to be in force in the following circumstances:

- upon entry into force of binding regulations repealing the earlier regulations;
- upon entry into force of a provision of the closing provisions of other binding regulations which repeals the earlier regulations;
- if a provision of a higher-ranking law or regulation, on the basis of which the relevant binding regulations were issued, ceases to be in force;

- upon entry into force of a judgment of the Constitutional Court which annuls the relevant regulations;
- in the case of binding regulations adopted for a limited time, if the period for which the binding regulations were intended to be in force expires.

Legal databases

Latvijas Vēstnesis, official gazette of the Republic of Latvia

The official publication Latvijas Vēstnesis is the official gazette of the Republic of Latvia. Publication of information therein constitutes its official publication.

- Official publication is publicly authentic and legally binding.
- No-one may claim ignorance of the legal acts or official announcements published in the official gazette.

Since 1 July 2012, the official gazette Latvijas Vēstnesis is published officially in electronic form on the website <https://www.vestnesis.lv/>. Information published on the website <https://www.vestnesis.lv/> prior to that date is for information purposes only. Publication of this information in the print version of Latvijas Vēstnesis constituted its official publication.

Consolidated legislation

Consolidated statutes, Cabinet Regulations and other laws and regulations are available on the Latvian legislative website <http://www.likumi.lv/>. All of the consolidated laws and regulations published on the website are for information purposes only. The website is maintained by the official publisher VSIA Latvijas Vēstnesis.

Official publisher

The publisher of the official gazette Latvijas Vēstnesis is the same as for the previous official newspaper of the same name: VSI A Latvijas Vēstnesis.

The official publisher operates in accordance with international standards ISO 9001:2008 (management system) and ISO 270001:2005 (information security).

Can the database be accessed free of charge?

Yes, Latvijas Vēstnesis is available free of charge. The electronic archive of the Latvijas Vēstnesis newspaper is also available free of charge. Access to the website of consolidated legal acts is also free.

Links

Saeima \(Parliament\) of the Republic of Latvia, Cabinet of the Republic of Latvia, Bank of Latvia, Financial and Capital Market Commission, Public Utilities Commission, Latvian local authorities, Official gazette *Latvijas Vēstnesis*, <http://www.likumi.lv/>

---

The national language version of this page is maintained by the respective Member State. The translations have been done by the European Commission service. Possible changes introduced in the original by the competent national authority may not be yet reflected in the translations. The European Commission accepts no responsibility or liability whatsoever with regard to any information or data contained or referred to in this document. Please refer to the legal notice to see copyright rules for the Member State responsible for this page.

Last update: 07/01/2016

Member State law - Lithuania

This page provides you with information on the Lithuanian legal system and an overview of Lithuanian law.

Sources of law

Sources of law are the official means by which legal provisions are conveyed and laid down.

A legal act is an official written document adopted by the competent state institution in which legal provisions are laid down and explained or in which the basis on which legal provisions are applicable in an individual case is indicated. Depending on the nature of the legal information laid down therein, legal acts comprise the following:

1. Legislative instruments – these are decisions of state institutions expressed in written form laying down, amending or repealing rules of a general nature applicable to an indeterminate group of addressees and approved by the state. Legislative instruments are divided into two categories:
  1. Laws, the highest-ranking of all legal acts, which are adopted by the Parliament of the Republic of Lithuania [Seimas] or by national referendum, setting out general legal provisions intended to regulate the main areas of human interaction and having overriding legal force. Laws are regarded as being the principal source of law.
  2. Subordinate instruments, which are legislative instruments adopted on the basis of a law intended to give it concrete form and ensure its implementation. Subordinate instruments may not be inconsistent with laws. They comprise the following:
    1. Parliamentary resolutions,
    2. Government resolutions,
    3. instructions and orders of ministerial departments,
    4. resolutions and decisions of local authorities and public administrations,
    5. other instruments.
2. Interpretative acts, which are adopted in order to shed light on the meaning and content of applicable legal provisions. These are adopted by an institution which has competence for interpreting the law.
3. Individual implementing acts, in which the requirements laid down by legal acts, are put into effect. In the same way as legislative instruments, individual implementing acts produce legal effects but do not have the status of a source of law because they do not create general rules of universal application but are addressed in terms of their prescriptive content to specific persons in specific circumstances and are of a one-off nature in the sense that they are no longer applicable when the social relation in question (recruitment, notice, pension award, etc.) ceases to exist.

Other sources of law

In addition to legislative instruments, the following are also deemed to be sources of primary law:

- General legal principles (good faith, equity, individual responsibility, reasonableness) are considered to be an integral part of the Lithuanian legal system both for interpreting statutory provisions and filling legal gaps. In addition, under Article 135(1) of the Constitution of the Republic of Lithuania, universally recognised principles of international law are also considered to form an integral part of the Lithuanian legal system, and Lithuanian courts are therefore required to apply and be guided by them.
- Legal customs, i.e. rules of conduct approved by the state established in society as being of repeated and long-term effect. The Civil Code of the Republic of Lithuania establishes customs as a direct source of law. They may be applied when a law or contract directly provides for their application or if there is a gap in legal regulation. Customs which contradict general legal principles or imperative legal provisions may not be applied.

The following are recognised as secondary sources of law:

- Judicial precedent, i.e. a court ruling in a specific case which has become a guide for courts of the same or a lower instance when examining analogous cases. Precedents are more of an advisory nature within the Lithuanian legal system.
- Legal doctrine.

Hierarchy of norms

The hierarchy of legal acts is as follows:

1. the Constitution,
2. constitutional laws,
3. ratified treaties,
4. laws,
5. other legal acts implementing laws (acts of the President, Government, Constitutional Court, etc.).

Institutional set-up:

The Lithuanian Parliament [Seimas] is the only institution entitled to adopt laws. Legal acts adopted by any other state institution must be consistent with the Constitution of the Republic of Lithuania and other laws.

Other legislative instruments may be adopted by:

- the Lithuanian Parliament (resolutions),
- the President (decrees),
- the Government (resolutions),
- ministries and other Government bodies (orders),
- local authorities (decisions, orders).

Legal databases

The Lithuanian database of legal acts (Lietuvos teisės aktų duomenų bazė) is owned and maintained by the Parliament of the Republic of Lithuania.

It contains the following:

- adopted legal acts,
- draft legal acts,
- resolutions,
- conclusions,
- other types of legislative instruments.

The documents in this database are neither official nor legally binding.

You can search the database in both English and Lithuanian. You can access the various types of legislative documents by clicking on the drop-down menu alongside 'Type'.

You can also find legislation and other legal documents in the Register of legal acts of Lithuania (Lietuvos teisės aktų registras). This site is maintained by the state enterprise Centre of Registers (valstybė įmonė Registrų centras) and is supervised by the Ministry of Justice. From 31 August 2013 the Register will be maintained by the Chancellery of the Parliament of the Republic of Lithuania.

Is access to the database free of charge?

Yes, access to both the register and database of legal acts of Lithuania is free of charge.

---

The national language version of this page is maintained by the respective Member State. The translations have been done by the European Commission service. Possible changes introduced in the original by the competent national authority may not be yet reflected in the translations. The European Commission accepts no responsibility or liability whatsoever with regard to any information or data contained or referred to in this document. Please refer to the legal notice to see copyright rules for the Member State responsible for this page.

Last update: 18/02/2019

Member State law - Luxembourg

The language version you are now viewing is currently being prepared by our translators. Please note that the following languages: fr have already been translated.

---

In this section, you will find an overview of the different sources of law in Luxembourg.

Sources of law

Hierarchy of norms

The expression 'sources of law' creates an image: it evokes the outpouring and the origins of the law.

These days, the Constitution and statutes can be considered the main sources of the law.

The Luxembourg Constitution

The first Luxembourg Constitution was drafted in 1841, two years after Luxembourg's independence in 1839, followed by the Constitutions of 1848 and 1856.

The current Constitution of Luxembourg dates from 17 October 1868. The text of the present Constitution has been revised several times since that time.

The Luxembourg Constitution is a rigid, written constitution. Due to its fundamental nature, the Constitution is still endowed with greater stability than ordinary law.

The current Constitution is composed of 121 articles, divided into thirteen chapters. It sets out the constitutional foundations of the State, the guarantee of citizens' rights and freedoms and how public power is organised.

- Chapter I: The State, its territory and the Grand Duke
- Chapter II: Luxembourgers and their rights
- Chapter III: Sovereign Power
- Chapter IV: The Chamber of Deputies
- Chapter V: Government of the Grand Duchy
- Chapter V bis: Council of State
- Chapter VI: The Judiciary
- Chapter VII: Public Force
- Chapter VIII: Finances
- Chapter IX: Communes
- Chapter X: Public Institutions
- Chapter XI: General Provisions
- Chapter XII: Transitory and Additional Provisions

Legislation as a source of law

Legislative system

In the legislative system of the Grand Duchy of Luxembourg, the initiative for a law may be issued by the Chamber of Deputies or the Government.

The Government's right to initiate legislation is called 'government initiative' and is exercised by presenting 'government bills'.

The right of initiative of the Chamber of Deputies is called 'parliamentary initiative' and is exercised by presenting 'private member's bills'.

Afterwards, these government or private member's bills are submitted for the different opinions of the bodies concerned (professional chambers), and most importantly, for the opinion of the Council of State. On hearing the opinion of the Council of State, the government or private member's bill is sent back to the Chamber of Deputies.

In the Luxembourg unicameral system, the Chamber of Deputies must, after voting on the bill, vote a second time on the whole text after a period of at least 3 months unless the Chamber and the Council of State both decide that this second vote by the Chamber may be waived. The final passing of a law by the Chamber of Deputies can only be completed by its promulgation by the Grand Duke and its publication in the Mémorial, the official journal of Luxembourg.

The regulatory system

Pursuant to Article 2 of the Act of 12 July 1996 reforming the Council of State, all draft regulations implementing laws and treaties may only be submitted to the Grand Duke once the Council of State has been consulted for its opinion.

However, the Government may waive this general rule in cases of emergency (to be evaluated by the Grand Duke on the basis of a properly reasoned report prepared by the proposing minister) and consequently dispense from seeking the opinion of the Haute Corporation (Council of State). Nevertheless, the exercise of this emergency procedure is deemed to be reserved for exceptional circumstances.

Moreover, if an act of parliament expressly requires that the Council of State is asked for its opinion on regulations implementing that law, under no circumstances may the emergency procedure be exercised. This is also the case for amendments to draft laws for which the Haute Corporation has already issued a first opinion.

In the same way as for acts of parliament, the Council of State delivers its opinions on draft regulations in the form of a reasoned report containing general considerations, an examination of the text of the draft and, where necessary, a counter draft regulation.

Examination by the Council of State takes into consideration the content and the form of draft regulations as well as their compliance with a higher legal norm.

Legislative databases

The Légilux site is the law portal of the Government of the Grand Duchy of Luxembourg on the Internet.

It provides access to Luxembourg legislation either in the form of the rough (original) texts in Mémorial A or in the form of consolidated texts, contained for the most part in legislative codes and digests.

The site is divided into three main areas, which are:

- The Legislation Area bringing together publications concerning Luxembourg legislation, various other publications and consolidated texts.
- The Administration Area featuring publications considered to be 'administrative'. This consists primarily in Mémorial B digests and the Annuaire Officiel d'Administration et de Législation (the official directory of administration and legislation).
- The Companies and Associations Area featuring Mémorial C digests, publications concerning commercial businesses and non-profit associations and foundations.

Is database access free of charge?

Yes, access to the databases is free of charge.

Related Links

Légilux Site

Ministry of Justice

---

The national language version of this page is maintained by the respective Member State. The translations have been done by the European Commission service. Possible changes introduced in the original by the competent national authority may not be yet reflected in the translations. The European Commission accepts no responsibility or liability whatsoever with regard to any information or data contained or referred to in this document. Please refer to the legal notice to see copyright rules for the Member State responsible for this page.

Last update: 20/12/2018

Member State law - Hungary

Please note that the original language version of this page hu has been amended recently. The language version you are now viewing is currently being prepared by our translators.

This page provides you with information about the legal system in Hungary.

---

Sources of law

I. Legislative hierarchy

1. Fundamental Law

The Fundamental Law (Fundamental Law of Hungary promulgated on 25 April 2011) sits at the apex of the legislative hierarchy in Hungary, and every other law must be compatible with it. The Fundamental Law was enacted by the National Assembly, and an amendment requires a two-thirds majority of the votes of all members of the Assembly [Article S(2) of the Fundamental Law].

The Fundamental Law and its transitional provisions (Transitional Provisions of the Fundamental Law of Hungary promulgated on 31 December 2011) entered into force on 1 January 2012.

The Fundamental Law of Hungary consists of six sections: a preamble entitled the National Avowal, as well as the sections entitled Foundation (Articles A–T), Freedom and Responsibility (Articles I–XXXI), the State (Articles 1–54), Special Legal Orders and Closing Provisions.

The section entitled Foundation contains general provisions and prescribes:

- the form of government,
- the fundamental principles of state operation,
- the transfer of certain powers to the European Union,
- Hungary's capital and regional administrative entities,
- the key provisions on Hungarian citizenship and how to obtain it,
- Hungary's official language, coat of arms, flag, national anthem, national holidays and official currency,
- the Fundamental Law's place in the Hungarian legal system, i.e. the Fundamental Law is the foundation of Hungary's legal system,
- the procedure for adopting and amending the Fundamental Law,
- the types of Hungarian legislation,
- a number of fundamental principles, including:
  - the prohibition on seizing and exercising power by force,
  - responsibility for the fate of Hungarians living beyond the borders of Hungary,
  - cooperation in establishing European unity,
  - protection of the institution of marriage,
  - ensuring the conditions for fair competition,
  - the principle of balanced, transparent and sustainable budget management,
  - the obligation to protect and sustain natural resources,
  - the creation and preservation of peace and security, and striving to cooperate with all nations and countries of the world to achieve the sustainable development of humanity.

The section entitled Freedom and Responsibility sets out fundamental rights and obligations. The following (among others) are recognised as fundamental rights:

- the right to life and human dignity,
- the prohibition of torture, any inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, enslavement and human trafficking,
- the prohibition of all practices aimed at eugenics, any use of the human body or any of its parts for financial gain, and human cloning,
- the right to freedom and personal safety, and provisions guaranteeing that no one is deprived of his or her liberty,
- the right to freedom of movement and to freely choose residence,
- the right to a private and family life,
- the right to the protection of personal data and access to data of public interest,
- the right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion,
- the right to peaceful assembly,
- the right to freedom of speech,
- to right to take part in cultural life,

- the right to freely choose one's work, occupation and entrepreneurial activities,
- the right to property,
- the prohibition on expelling Hungarian citizens from the territory of Hungary,
- the right to asylum,
- equality before the law,
- non-discrimination,
- the prohibition of child labour,
- the right to a healthy environment,
- the right to vote and to stand as a candidate in the elections of Members of the National Assembly, local representatives and mayors, and of Members of the European Parliament,
- the right to have one's affairs administered by the authorities in an impartial, fair and reasonably timely manner,
- the right of every Hungarian citizen to be protected by Hungary during his or her stay abroad,
- the Fundamental Law also defines the nationalities and the key rights of persons subject to prosecution.

According to the Fundamental Law, Hungary strives, among other things, to:

- provide social security to all of its citizens,
- provide every person with decent housing and access to public services.

The Fundamental Law also lays down various obligations, namely:

- the obligation to contribute to satisfying common needs (equal tax treatment),
- the obligation for Hungarian citizens to defend their country.

The section of the Fundamental Law entitled the State contains the most fundamental rules applying to public dignitaries and the most important institutions of the country, setting out the legal status and tasks of:

- the National Assembly,
- the President of the Republic,
- the government,
- the autonomous regulatory bodies,
- the Constitutional Court,
- the judiciary and prosecution services,
- the Commissioner for Fundamental Rights,
- the local governments,
- the National Bank of Hungary,
- the State Audit Office,
- the Hungarian armed forces,
- the police and national security services,
- the national referenda.

The section of the Fundamental Law entitled Special Legal Orders contains rules governing states of national crisis, states of emergency, states of preventive defence, unexpected attacks and states of extreme danger.

2. Acts of Parliament

In Hungary, Acts are adopted by the National Assembly. According to the Fundamental Law the rules for fundamental rights and obligations are determined by Acts. The National Assembly adopts Acts by a simple majority of votes (more than half of the votes of the members present), except for so-called cardinal Acts defined by the Fundamental Law, the adoption and amendment of which require a two-thirds majority of the votes of Members of the National Assembly present.

According to the Fundamental Law cardinal Acts apply for example to citizenship, the churches, the rights of the national minorities living in Hungary, the legal status and remuneration of Members of the National Assembly and of the President of the Republic, the Constitutional Court, the local governments, the detailed rules for the use of the coat of arms and the flag, and the provisions on state decorations.

According to the Fundamental Law the authorisation to recognise the binding nature of the European Union's founding and amending Treaties, the declaration of a state of war, conclusion of peace and declaration of a state of special legal order require a two-thirds majority of the votes of all Members of the National Assembly.

Prior to the adoption of Act XXXI of 1989 on the amendment of the Constitution, the Presidential Council of Hungary was authorised to issue decree laws. From the point of view of legislative hierarchy, decree laws still in force qualify as regulations at the same level as Acts.

3. Decrees

The Fundamental Law recognises government decrees, Prime Ministerial decrees, ministerial decrees, decrees by the Governor of the National Bank of Hungary, decrees by the heads of autonomous regulatory bodies and local government decrees.

In a state of national crisis the National Defence Council, and in a state of emergency the President of the Republic, can also issue decrees.

3.1. Government decrees

The government's authority to enact decrees may be primary or based on legislative authority. The primary powers are established by Article 15(3) of the Fundamental Law, which declares that the government may issue decrees within its sphere of authority on any matter not regulated by an Act. No decree of the Government shall conflict with any Act. This does not restrict the powers of the National Assembly, which may consider any regulatory field under its authority.

According to the Fundamental Law and Act CXXX of 2010 on legislation, the government may, also based on specific legislative authority, enact decrees that implement Acts. Under Section 5(1) of the Legislation Act, an authorisation to issue implementing regulations must specify the holder, subject and scope of the authority. The holder may not pass legislative authority to another party.

3.2. Prime Ministerial decrees

According to the Fundamental Law the Prime Minister can also issue decrees, e.g. appoint a deputy prime minister from among the ministers by decree. Prime ministerial decrees are ranked at the same level as ministerial decrees in the hierarchy of legislation.

3.3. Ministerial decrees

Ministerial decrees are ranked below government decrees in the hierarchy of legislation. According to the Fundamental Law ministers adopt decrees by authority of an Act or a government decree (issued within their original legislative competence), whether independently or in agreement with any other minister; such decrees may not conflict with any Act, government decree or decree of the Governor of the National Bank of Hungary.

3.4. Decrees of the Governor of the National Bank of Hungary

Acting within his or her competence defined by a cardinal Act, the Governor of the National Bank of Hungary may issue decrees by statutory authorisation, which may not conflict with any law.

3.5. Decrees by the heads of autonomous regulatory bodies

According to Article 23(4) of the Fundamental Law, acting within their competence defined by a cardinal Act, the heads of autonomous regulatory bodies issue decrees by statutory authorisation, which may not conflict with any Act, government decree, Prime Ministerial decree, ministerial decree or with any decree of the Governor of the National Bank of Hungary.

3.6. Local government decrees

According to Article 32(2) of the Fundamental Law, acting within their competences, local governments may adopt local decrees in order to regulate local social relations not regulated by an Act or by authority of an Act.

Local government decrees may not conflict with any other legislation.

The detailed rules on decrees to be adopted by local government representative bodies are laid down in Act CLXXXIX of 2011 on Hungary's local governments.

4. International agreements and the fundamental principles of international law

The government of Hungary may conclude international agreements with other states / the governments of other states. In Hungary, the relationship between international agreements and domestic law is based on a dualist system; that is, international agreements become part of domestic law via their promulgation by legal regulations.

Principles of international law

According to Article Q(3) of the Fundamental Law, Hungary accepts the generally recognised rules of international law. Customary international law and the general principles of international law become part of domestic law without the need for transformation.

II. Other sources of law taken in a broader sense and not qualifying as legislation

1. Legal instruments of state administration

The Hungarian legal system includes legal instruments of state administration which, although they contain normative provisions, do not qualify as legislation.

The Legislation Act (Act CXXX of 2010) defines two types of legal instruments of state administration: normative decisions and normative orders. These are rules of conduct that are not generally binding, i.e. not binding on everyone. They are merely internal provisions, organisational and operational rules relating solely to the issuer or subordinated bodies or persons. Normative decisions and orders cannot determine the rights and obligations of citizens. Legal instruments of state administration cannot conflict with other legislation and cannot repeat legislative provisions.

Under the former Legislation Act (Act XI of 1987) statistical communications and legal guidelines also qualified as sources of law (known as other legal instruments of governance) not qualifying as legislation. The new Legislation Act no longer mentions them. However, whereas legal guidelines were repealed when the new Act entered into force (on 1 January 2011), statistical instruments issued prior to that date remain in force until they are repealed. (Statistical communications are issued by the President of the Central Statistical Office and contain legally binding provisions, consisting exclusively of statistical terms, methods, classifications, lists and figures.)

1.1. Normative decisions

In normative decisions the National Assembly, the government and other central administrative bodies, the Constitutional Court and the Budget Council may lay down their own organisation and functioning, activities and action programmes.

Local government representative bodies can also lay down their own activities and those of bodies run by them, as well as their action programmes and the organisation and functioning of bodies run by them in normative decisions. Similarly, the representative body of national self-governments can lay down their own organisation and functioning, activities and action programmes as well as those of bodies run by them in normative decisions.

1.2. Normative orders

Within their remit and as provided for in legislation, the President of the Republic, the Prime Minister, the head of central administrative bodies (with the exception of the government), the President of the National Judicial Office, the Supreme Prosecutor, the Commissioner for Fundamental Rights, the Governor of the National Bank of Hungary, the President of the State Audit Office, the head of the metropolitan or county government office, mayors and town clerks may lay down the organisation, functioning and activities of bodies led, run or supervised by them in normative orders.

Moreover, the National Assembly, the President of the Republic, the Constitutional Court, the Commissioner for Fundamental Rights, autonomous regulatory bodies, the Prime Minister's Office and the head of the official organisation of the ministry may issue normative orders which are binding on the organisation's staff.

2. Decisions of the Constitutional Court

Decisions of the Constitutional Court play an important role in the Hungarian legislative system.

According to Act CLI of 2011 on the Constitutional Court the tasks of the Constitutional Court are as follows:

- ex post review of the compliance of legislation with the Fundamental Law (ex post review procedure);

- (preventive) review of the compliance of Acts that have been adopted but not yet promulgated and certain provisions of international treaties with the Fundamental Law;
- an individual review at the request of a judge: if in the course of hearing a case a judge is to apply a piece of legislation which he or she considers unconstitutional or which the Constitutional Court has found to be unconstitutional, he or she shall suspend the proceedings and ask the Constitutional Court to find the piece of legislation or legislative provision unconstitutional and prohibit the unconstitutional piece of legislation from being applied;
- handing down judgments on constitutional complaints based on violation of rights guaranteed in the Fundamental Law: the person or organisation involved in the individual case may lodge a constitutional complaint if his, her or its right guaranteed in the Fundamental Law is breached following the implementation of the unconstitutional legislation in the judicial proceedings on going in the case, and he, she or it has exhausted all appeal options or does not have any right of appeal;
- examining any legislative act for conflict with any international agreement;
- termination of legislative omissions by the legislator which conflict with the Fundamental Law;
- resolution of certain conflicts of competence between state bodies or between local governments and other state bodies;
- interpretation of provisions of the Fundamental Law;
- miscellaneous proceedings falling under its competence according to provisions of law.

The Constitutional Court provides detailed reasons for its decisions. Constitutional Court decisions may not be appealed and are binding on all.

3. Case-law of the courts

In order to fulfil its responsibility of ensuring the uniform application of law and providing judicial guidance to lower courts, Hungary's supreme court, the Curia (known prior to 1 January 2012 as the Supreme Court) passes judicial uniformity decisions and issues judicial decisions of principle.

A judicial uniformity procedure can be initiated if the development and uniformity of judicial practice requires the adoption of a judicial uniformity decision in a matter of principle, and if a chamber of the Curia intends to deviate from the decision taken by another chamber of the Curia. A decision relating to uniformity in the law is binding on the courts.

Decisions of principle derive from the practice of the Curia's judicial chambers and also promote uniformity in sentencing.

Decisions handed down to ensure uniformity in law and decisions of principle are published in the Supreme Court's Official Repertory of Decisions.

III. Scope of application of legislation

The geographical scope of application of legislation extends to the territory of Hungary, while that of local government decrees extends to the administrative area of the local government. The personal scope of application of legislation extends to natural persons, legal persons and organisations without legal personality in the territory of Hungary, Hungarian citizens outside the territory of Hungary, and in the case of local government decrees to natural persons, legal persons and organisations without legal personality in the administrative area of the local government.

The Legislation Act prohibits retroactive validity, stating that a piece of legislation cannot establish obligations or make them more onerous, withdraw or restrict rights or declare conduct illegal in the period preceding its entry into force.

Legislation must always establish the date of its entry into force in such a way that sufficient time is available to prepare for its application.

The legislation and its implementing regulations must enter into force at the same time. A piece of legislation (or a legislative provision) becomes invalid if it is repealed or – if it contains only amending or repealing provisions – on the basis of the Legislation Act.

IV. Legal databases

In Hungary the Official Gazette is the Magyar Közlöny, which is published in electronic form and whose text must be considered authentic.

The Gazette contains Hungarian legislation (excluding local government decrees), including:

- orders and decisions of the Constitutional Court, which must be published in the Official Gazette in line with legal provisions or on the basis of a decision by the Constitutional Court;
- decisions of the National Assembly;
- judicial uniformity decisions of the Curia;
- opinions of the National Election Committee;
- annexure, including the Collection of Decisions;
- the Official Report.

The National Legislation Database contains all legislation (excluding local government decrees) and legal instruments of state administration in force on the date of the search. This is presented in a consolidated version, together with amendments and other changes.

You can search for this information by title and number, and it is also possible to search the text.

Access to these databases is free of charge, and no restrictions apply.

Related links

Authentic Electronic Official Gazette

National Legislation Database

---

The national language version of this page is maintained by the respective Member State. The translations have been done by the European Commission service. Possible changes introduced in the original by the competent national authority may not be yet reflected in the translations. The European Commission accepts no responsibility or liability whatsoever with regard to any information or data contained or referred to in this document. Please refer to the legal notice to see copyright rules for the Member State responsible for this page.

Last update: 16/02/2016

Member State law - Malta

This page provides information on the legal system in Malta.

---

Sources of law

- Acts of Parliament (Primary Legislation);
- Regulations, Rules, Orders, Bylaws (Subsidiary Legislation); and
- EU Law including decisions of the ECJ.

The Constitution is the basic source of national law and stipulates that laws are passed by Parliament in the form of Acts of Parliament, but that Parliament may delegate legislative powers to other bodies (i.e. ministers, authorities, public bodies etc.) which are empowered to make subsidiary legislation within the sphere of authority delegated to them by an Act of Parliament.

The national legal order must also be viewed in the context of EU legislation, and especially the Treaty of Accession.

In Malta, there is no judge made law: The Court interprets the law as contained in the various enactments. This does not mean however that judicial precedents are not authoritative. In fact judges as a general rule do not depart from a well settled principle established by case law, if not for grave reason. It is also the practice in the Inferior Courts to follow the principle laid down on points of law by a Superior Court.

Types of legal instruments - description

International treaties may also form part of Malta's domestic legislation.

The European Convention on Human Rights

By virtue of an Act of the Maltese Parliament, Act XIV of 1987, the European Convention of Human Rights was incorporated into Maltese law. No law in Malta may be inconsistent with the rights and freedoms set out in the Convention. The power of review is vested in the Courts.

Hierarchy of norms

At national level, the Constitution is the supreme law of the land, followed by Acts of Parliament, followed by subsidiary legislation. However, as noted above, the Treaty of Accession and EU regulations are legally binding and operative in Malta, as in all Member States, and must be taken into account along with EU law in general.

Institutional framework

Institutions responsible for the adoption of legal rules

In essence, a system of checks and balances between the legislature, executive and judiciary is followed. While the three pillars exercise legislative, executive and judicial powers in their own sphere, the system of checks and balances, which Malta inherited from English principles of the rule of law, allows smooth operation of the legal system in Malta.

Decision - making process

Malta follows the British parliamentary system, which is not surprising following 180 years of British rule. A minister proposes a draft law, which is then published in the Gazette for a first reading to be given in Parliament. Depending on the importance of the law in question a white paper may or may not be published beforehand. The House of Representatives then forms a committee and, after a second reading where members of Parliament are given the opportunity to comment in general terms on the particular piece of legislation in question, the Committee Stage examines each and every article in detail and proposes any amendments. When the Committee Stage is completed the Bill is sent back to Parliament for a final third reading, is subsequently given assent to by the President of the Republic and then becomes law.

The general rule is that a law enters into force on the date of publication, unless specifically stated in the law itself that the minister concerned may bring the law (or part of the law) into force on a different date.

Legal databases

National Legislative Database: Laws of Malta – Legal Services

The service gives free access to:

- All national main and subsidiary legislation;
- Legal publications including acts, bills, legal notices and by laws.

Related Links

Laws of Malta

---

The national language version of this page is maintained by the respective Member State. The translations have been done by the European Commission service. Possible changes introduced in the original by the competent national authority may not be yet reflected in the translations. The European Commission accepts no responsibility or liability whatsoever with regard to any information or data contained or referred to in this document. Please refer to the legal notice to see copyright rules for the Member State responsible for this page.

Last update: 20/12/2016

Member State law - Netherlands

This page provides you with information about the judicial system in the Netherlands.

The Dutch Government consists of the Ministers, their Secretaries of State and the King. To that extent, the Netherlands is something of an exception among the Western European monarchies, in most of which the monarch is not part of the government. Since the comprehensive review of the Constitution in 1848 the Netherlands has been a constitutional monarchy with a parliamentary system.

Sources of law

Types of legal instrument - description

The Constitution provides the framework for the organisation of the Dutch state and forms the basis for legislation. Treaties between the Netherlands and other states are a major source of law. Article 93 of the Constitution stipulates that provisions of treaties and of decisions by international institutions may have direct effect in the Dutch legal system, in which case these provisions take precedence over Dutch laws. Thus, statutory measures that are in force within the Kingdom of the Netherlands do not apply if they are incompatible with those provisions. Therefore, the rules of the European Union laid down in treaties, regulations and directives are a major source of law in the Netherlands.

The Charter for the Kingdom of the Netherlands governs relations between the three parts of the Kingdom (the Netherlands and the two overseas parts, the Netherlands Antilles and Aruba).

Laws are made at national level.

By means of delegation by law, the central government may lay down (further) rules in orders in council and in ministerial regulations. Independent orders in council (which are not derived from a law) are possible, but cannot be enforced by a penal provision.

The Constitution confers regulatory authority upon the lower bodies under public law (provinces, municipalities and water boards).

General principles of law are of relevance to government and the dispensation of justice. Sometimes, this is implied by the law, as in the Civil Code for instance (reasonableness and fairness). The court may also take its cue from general principles of law when passing judgment.

Custom is a further source of law. In principle, a custom is only relevant if the law refers to it, but still the court may take account of custom in its judgment in the event of conflict. Custom cannot be a source of law when establishing a criminal offence (Article 16 of the Constitution).

Legal precedent is a source of law, as court rulings have wider significance than the specific case in which the ruling was pronounced. The rulings of higher courts serve as guidance. Those of the Supreme Court are particularly authoritative as the task of this court is to promote uniformity in the law. In new cases, therefore, the lower court will consider a ruling of the Supreme Court when reaching judgment.

The hierarchy of sources of law

Article 94 of the Constitution states that some international rules of law take hierarchical precedence: statutory provisions that are incompatible with these rules do not apply. European law, by its nature, takes precedence over national law. This is followed by the Charter, the Constitution and Acts of Parliament. These rank above other measures. Acts of Parliament are adopted jointly by the government and the States General (the people's elected representatives).

It is also stipulated that a law may wholly or partly lose its effect only as a result of a subsequent law. In addition, there is a general rule of interpretation that specific laws rank above general laws.

In the continental tradition, written law is considered to be a higher source of law than legal precedent.

Institutional framework

The authorities responsible for adopting legal provisions

The legislative process

The Constitution does not provide for a 'legislative power'. Laws are a joint decision of the government and States General. Legislative proposals can be submitted by the government or the Lower House of the States General. The Council of State advises on legislative proposals, as well as on orders in council. Other stakeholders are generally consulted when a legislative proposal is being prepared.

The Lower House has the right of amendment. Usually, the Council of Ministers adopts legislative proposals and sends them to the Council of State for its recommendation. The government responds to that recommendation by drawing up a further report. Then, the government sends the legislative proposal – with any necessary amendments – to the Lower House by Royal Message. The proposal may be amended while it is being debated by the Lower House. Once it has been accepted by the Lower House, the Upper House debates the proposal. No further amendments may be made at this stage; the Upper House may only accept or reject the legislative proposal. Once it has been accepted by the Upper House, the head of state ratifies the proposal and it becomes law.

Legal databases

 Overheid.nl is the central access point for all information about the government organisations of the Netherlands. This page provides access to:

- Official publications
- Official gazettes
- Parliamentary papers.

The 'Wet- en regelgeving' page contains consolidated legislation dating from 1 May 2002.

Is access to the database free of charge?

Access to the website and database is free of charge.

Links

Regering.nl, Ministerie van Buitenlandse Zaken, Tweede Kamer

Government.nl, Houseofrepresentatives.nl

---

The national language version of this page is maintained by the respective Member State. The translations have been done by the European Commission service. Possible changes introduced in the original by the competent national authority may not be yet reflected in the translations. The European Commission accepts no responsibility or liability whatsoever with regard to any information or data contained or referred to in this document. Please refer to the legal notice to see copyright rules for the Member State responsible for this page.

Last update: 23/05/2018

Member State law - Austria

The language version you are now viewing is currently being prepared by our translators. Please note that the following languages: de have already been translated.

---

Introduction – This page provides information on the Austrian legal system and an overview of Austrian law.

Sources of law

Austrian law is primarily written law. Customary law plays only a very restricted role. The judgments of the highest courts provide valuable guidance for the application of the law, and are of great importance, but judge-made law is not formally recognised as a source of law.

The Austrian constitution declares that generally recognised rules of international law form part of Austrian federal law, and provides for international treaties to be incorporated into the Austrian legal system, with or without specific legislation. The ranking of treaty provisions within the domestic legal system is determined by their content.

In order to be approved in the Lower House of Parliament (Nationalrat), international treaties that amend or supplement the constitution require the same special majorities as federal constitutional laws. Treaties that amend or supplement statute law require the same quorums as statutes.

In principle, the Federal President concludes international treaties at the request of the federal government or of the federal minister empowered by it. Political treaties and treaties that amend or supplement legislation require the prior consent of the Lower House. The Federal President may empower the federal government or the responsible members of the federal government to conclude categories of international treaties which are not political and do not amend or supplement legislation.

In accordance with the Austrian federal constitution, each of the nine federal provinces (Bundesländer) is subject to its own provincial constitutional law in addition to federal constitutional law. Provincial constitutional law must not be inconsistent with federal constitutional law, and is therefore subordinate to it. But in principle there is no such order of precedence between federal and provincial statute. Since 1988, provinces have been able to conclude international treaties in matters falling within their jurisdiction. In foreign affairs, however, the federal government continues to take precedence.

Types of legal instrument - hierarchy of sources of law

Federal constitutional legislation must be passed by a majority of two thirds of the votes cast in the Lower House, at least half the members being present. The legislation must be expressly designated as a 'constitutional act' or 'constitutional provision'.

Federal statute law requires the presence of at least one third of the members of the Lower House and an absolute majority of the votes cast.

1. The guiding principles of the federal constitution

The following guiding principles of the federal constitution are the most important provisions in the Austrian legal system:

- the democratic principle,
- the principle of the separation of powers,
- the principle of the rule of law,
- the republican principle,
- the federal principle, and
- the liberal principle.

Together these guiding principles form what is known as the fundamental constitutional order (verfassungsrechtliche Grundordnung).

They are of great constitutional importance. Any major amendment of the federal constitution must be approved by referendum as part of the legislative process. The abandonment of any of the guiding principles, or a substantial change to the relationship between them, is regarded as a comprehensive revision of the constitution.

2. Primary and secondary EU law

The accession of Austria to the European Union on 1 January 1995 required a comprehensive revision of the Austrian federal constitution. Since Austria's accession, the legal system has been based not only on Austrian constitutional law but also on European Union law. The prevailing view is that EU law takes precedence over domestic law and also over ordinary federal constitutional law, but not over the guiding principles of the federal constitution

3. 'Ordinary' federal constitutional law

Constitutional law lays down the rules of the political game, as it specifies:

- the legislative procedure,
- the status of the highest bodies within the state,
- the relationship between the federal government and the provinces in lawmaking and the application of the law, and
- the control of government activity by the law courts.

4. Federal statute

The fundamental principle of the rule of law laid down in the constitution requires that the application of the law in public administration and in the courts must be conducted in accordance with statute. The federal constitution divides legislative powers between the federal government and the provinces.

5. Regulations

Regulations (Verordnungen) are general legal provisions made by administrative authorities which are binding on all persons subject to the law. The constitution confers a general authorisation to make implementing regulations fleshing out the rules laid down in more general provisions, usually in statute law. Regulations may amend or supplement statute only where there is express authorisation in the constitution.

6. Decisions

Decisions (Bescheide) are primarily administrative acts applying the law which are addressed only to specified persons.

Institutional framework

The legislature

The federal constitution divides powers between the federal government and the provinces, and various bodies are involved in the legislative process.

Federal statute law has to pass both houses of parliament, the Lower House (Nationalrat) and the Upper House (Bundesrat). The 183 members of the Lower House are directly elected by the people. The Upper House is elected by the provincial councils (Landtage). As a rule the Upper House is entitled only to enter a suspensory objection to a bill.

Provincial statute law is enacted by the provincial councils.

The legislative process

Bills may be submitted to the Lower House:

- by members of the Lower House itself
- by the federal government
- by the Upper House.

A citizens' initiative must be laid before the Lower House if it is signed by 100 000 voters, or by one sixth of the voters in three federal provinces.

In practice most legislation originates with the federal government. Federal government bills must be approved by the federal government (in cabinet) unanimously. They are drafted by the responsible minister, and before they are approved by the government comments are invited from other bodies, such as provinces or interest groups.

After being passed in the Lower House bills require the assent of the Upper House. (Federal finance bills do not have to be submitted to the Upper House.) The Chancellor then submits the bill to the President for authentication.

The Lower House may resolve that a referendum is to be held on a bill. A referendum may also be required by a majority of the members of the Lower House. The bill, which has already passed the Lower House, must then be approved by referendum before it is authenticated. A referendum is also required for a comprehensive revision of the constitution.

The President certifies that an act has been passed in accordance with the constitution by signing it. That authentication must be countersigned by the Chancellor.

Once the Chancellor has countersigned it, federal legislation is published in the Bundesgesetzblatt (Federal Law Gazette). Unless a federal act itself makes express provision providing for retroactive effect or specifying the date when it is to come into force, it comes into force at the end of the day of the publication and distribution of the issue of the Federal Law Gazette publishing it.

An act can be repealed either expressly or by the passing of new legislation whose content is inconsistent with the earlier provision (lex posterior derogat legi priori). Specific rules take precedence over general rules (lex specialis derogat legi generali). The period of validity of an act may also be stated from the outset.

Legal databases

Coordinated and operated by the Federal Chancellor's Office, the Legal Information System of the Republic of Austria (Rechtsinformationssystem des Bundes — RIS) gives online access to Austrian legislation.

Is access to the database free of charge?

The Legal Information System of the Republic of Austria (RIS) is free of charge.

Brief description of content

The RIS database provides information on:

- Federal law
  1. Federal law
  2. Authentic version of the Bundesgesetzblatt (Federal Law Gazette) since 2004
  3. Bundesgesetzblatt (Federal Law Gazette) 1945 – 2003
  4. Law gazettes 1848–1940
  5. Law gazettes 1780–1848
  6. German law gazettes 1938–1945

7. Draft bills

8. Government bills

- Provincial law

1. Provincial law

2. Current provincial law gazettes for the provinces with the exception of Lower Austria and Vienna

- Municipal law

Only selected documents from Carinthia, Lower Austria, Salzburg, Styria and Vienna

- Judgments

1. Constitutional Court (Verfassungsgerichtshof)

2. Administrative Court (Verwaltungsgerichtshof)

3. The list of legislative acts (Normenliste) drawn up by the Administrative Court

4. Judgments of the Supreme Court (Oberster Gerichtshof), the higher regional courts (Oberlandsgerichte) and other courts

5. Independent administrative tribunals (Unabhängige Verwaltungssenate)

6. Independent Finance Tribunal (Unabhängiger Finanzsenat)

7. Court of Asylum (Asylgerichtshof)

8. Independent Federal Asylum Tribunal (Unabhängiger Bundesasylsenat)

9. Environmental Tribunal (Umweltsenat)

10. Federal Communications Board (Bundeskommunikationssenat)

11. Procurement review authorities (Vergabekontrollbehörden)

12. Appeals Tribunal (Berufungskommission) and Supreme Disciplinary Commission (Disziplinaroberkommission)

13. Data Protection Commission (Datenschutzkommission)

14. Supervisory Tribunal for Employees' Representation (PersonalvertretungsAufsichtskommission)

15. Equal Treatment Commissions (Gleichbehandlungskommissionen)

- General circulars (Erlasse)

1. Circulars issued by federal ministries

2. Circulars issued by the Federal Ministry of Justice

Some Austrian laws are also available in English.

More information can be found on the website of the Legal Information System of the Republic of Austria.

Related links

Legal order – Austria

---

The national language version of this page is maintained by the respective Member State. The translations have been done by the European Commission service. Possible changes introduced in the original by the competent national authority may not be yet reflected in the translations. The European Commission accepts no responsibility or liability whatsoever with regard to any information or data contained or referred to in this document. Please refer to the legal notice to see copyright rules for the Member State responsible for this page.

Last update: 25/04/2017

Member State law - Poland

This page provides you with information about the legal system in Poland.

---

Poland is a republic with a democratic form of government. The legislative power is vested in the Parliament, which consists of the lower house – the Sejm – and the upper house – the Senate. The executive power is vested in the President of the Republic of Poland (Prezydent Rzeczypospolitej Polskiej) and the Council of Ministers (Rada Ministrów). The judicial power is vested in the courts and tribunals.

The Polish legal system is based on the continental legal system (civil law tradition). The common courts in Poland are the courts of appeal (sądy apelacyjne), provincial courts (okręg)(sądy okręgowe) and district courts (rejon)(sady rejonowe). They are competent to hear criminal law cases, civil law cases, family and custody law cases, labour law cases and social insurance cases.

The administrative judiciary falls under the High Administrative Court (Naczelny Sąd Administracyjny), which has judicial control of public administration.

The Supreme Court (Sąd Najwyższy) is the highest central judicial organ in the Republic of Poland, and thus the highest court of appeal. The main tasks of the Supreme Court are to administer justice in Poland (together with the common, administrative and military courts), to consider cassation as a form of extraordinary appeal and to adopt resolutions concerning the interpretation of law.

The Constitutional Tribunal (Trybunał Konstytucyjny) is an organ of the judiciary. It is competent to decide on:

- The conformity of an issued law with the Constitution
- Disputes about competence between the organs of central administration
- The conformity of political parties' objectives and activities with the Constitution
- Constitutional complaints filed by citizens

The English version of the Act governing the Constitutional Tribunal and other related Acts are provided on the Polish Constitutional Tribunal web page.

Sources of law

The sources of Polish law are the Constitution, statutes, ratified international agreements and regulations. The Constitution is considered the most important source of Polish law. It contains information about the Polish law system, institutional organisation, the judicial system and local authorities. It also covers political freedoms and rights. The Constitution that is currently binding was enacted in 1997. The text of the Polish Constitution is available on the website of the Lower house of the Polish Parliament \(Sejm\) in Polish, English, German, French and Russian.

Types of legal instruments – description

Statutes (ustawy) are universally binding instruments that cover significant issues. Any issue can be the subject of a statute. In some cases, the Constitution imposes an obligation to regulate on a specific issue in a statute: for example, a budget or the legal status of citizens.

According to the Polish Constitution, some international agreements (umowy międzynarodowe) must, prior to ratification, be confirmed by a statute, which must be adopted by the parliament and signed by the President. These include issues like alliances; political or military treaties; citizens' freedoms, rights and duties; membership of international organisations, and other issues regulated by the Constitution.

Regulations (rozporządzenia) are issued by the governing bodies named in the Constitution as authorised by statute.

The Council of Ministers is entitled to issue resolutions (uchwały) of an internal nature, which are binding only on the organisational units that are subordinate to the institution issuing the resolution; these cannot provide the legal basis for decisions taken concerning citizens, legal persons and other subjects.

The local government authorities and the local authorities of governmental administration can, on the basis of authorisation by statute, enact local laws (akty prawa miejscowego) that apply to their areas of administration.

Hierarchy of norms

The Constitution is the first source of Polish law. Other norms in the hierarchy of the Polish Constitution are: ratified international agreements, regulations, directives and decisions of European Union, statutes, orders and Acts of local authorities.

Institutional framework

Institutions responsible for the adoption of legal rules

Legislative power is exercised by the Sejm and the Senate, the two chambers of the Polish Parliament. Members are elected to a four-year term of office. The right to introduce legislation belongs to the deputies, the Senate, the President of the Republic of Poland and the Council of Ministers. The right to introduce legislation also belongs to a group of at least 100,000 citizens, who have a right to vote in elections to the Sejm.

The Sejm considers Bills in three readings. When a Bill has been adopted by the Sejm and Senate, it is sent to the President for signature. The President may, before signing a Bill, refer it to the Constitutional Tribunal to adjudicate on its conformity with the Constitution.

The Council of Ministers ensures the implementation of statutes, issues regulations, concludes international agreements requiring ratification, and accepts or renounces other international agreements.

Decision-making process

Initiation

Legislation can be introduced by deputies, the Senate, the President of the Republic, the Council of Ministers and a group of at least 100.000 citizens entitled to vote in elections to the Sejm.

In most cases, Bills are submitted by the Council of Ministers or by deputies.

A Bill, with its justification, must be submitted to the Marshal of the Sejm (Marszałek Sejmu), who forwards it to the President of the Republic, to the Senate and to the President of the Council of Ministers (prime minister).

Discussion

The Sejm considers Bills in three readings. Bills are also examined by the specified commissions of the Sejm and Senate.

Adoption

The Senate must, within 30 days of submitting a Bill, adopt it without amendments, adopt amendments or resolve upon its complete rejection. The Sejm can reject the amendments of the Senate only by an absolute majority vote in the presence of at least half of the statutory number of deputies.

Proclamation

After the completion of the procedure in the Sejm and the Senate, the Marshal of the Sejm must submit the adopted Bill to the President for signature. The President of the Republic must sign a Bill within 21 days of submission and must order its promulgation in the Journal of Laws of the Republic of Poland (Dziennik Ustaw). Fourteen days later, the Act enters into force. However, the date of entry into force can also be set in the text of a Bill. According to the Polish legal system, a Bill can be repealed only by another Bill. The date when the Act or law will lose force of law must be included in the text of the Act or law.

Legal databases

You can find legal Acts dating back to 1918 on the website of the Polish legal database \(Sejm\), together with a list of these Acts.

Access to the database is free.

---

The national language version of this page is maintained by the respective Member State. The translations have been done by the European Commission service. Possible changes introduced in the original by the competent national authority may not be yet reflected in the translations. The European Commission accepts no responsibility or liability whatsoever with regard to any information or data contained or referred to in this document. Please refer to the legal notice to see copyright rules for the Member State responsible for this page.

Last update: 10/12/2012

Member State law - Portugal

This page provides you with information on the legal system in Portugal.

1. Instruments, or sources of law, which set out legal rules

The following are traditionally regarded as sources of law in Portugal:

(a) Constitutional laws, which comprise the Portuguese Constitution itself, miscellaneous constitutional laws and laws amending the Constitution.

(b) 'The rules and principles of general or common international law', 'the rules set out in duly ratified or approved international agreements', 'rules issued by the competent bodies of international organisations to which Portugal belongs ...', on condition that this is laid down in the respective constituent treaties' and 'the provisions of the treaties that govern the European Union and the rules issued by its institutions in the exercise of their respective responsibilities' (Article 8 of the Constitution).

(c) Ordinary laws, which comprise laws enacted by the Assembly of the Republic, decree-laws issued by the Government and regional legislative decrees adopted by the Legislative Assemblies of the Autonomous Regions of the Azores and Madeira.

(d) Instruments with effect equivalent to that of laws, such as acts approving international conventions, treaties or agreements, generally binding decisions of the Constitutional Court declaring measures to be unconstitutional or illegal, collective labour agreements and other collective instruments regulating labour relations.

(e) Regulations, or legislative instruments of lower status than laws, whose purpose is to supplement laws and fill out the details so that they can be applied or implemented. These comprise implementing decrees, regulations, decrees, regional implementing decrees, decisions, rules, ministerial implementing orders, executive orders, police regulations issued by the Civil Governors, and municipal orders and regulations.

2. Other sources of law

Views differ as to the admissibility and importance of other sources outside the sphere of the State's political power to create written law, depending on whether the sources are regarded as a means of establishing legal rules or a means of disclosing the rules, or both. A distinction is sometimes drawn between direct and indirect sources, which avoids some of the difficulties arising from the differences in basic approach.

The following are commonly referred to as possible sources of law:

(a) Custom, in other words the repeated and habitual adoption of a particular line of conduct that is generally believed to be mandatory. This can be regarded as a source of law only in certain subject areas. Rules created in this way may, for instance, be found in the field of public international law (e.g. the principle of the immunity of foreign States from prosecution), international private law and administrative law.

(b) Case-law, i.e. the set of principles emerging from judgments and decisions handed down by the courts; it is regarded in some quarters as not constituting a genuine source of law but as significant merely in revealing the meaning of legal provisions by providing solutions to problems of interpretation that may be followed in other instances according to the weight carried by the logical and technical arguments on which they are based. Some authors include in this category not only court decisions in specific cases but also judicial rulings which have the force of law (generally binding decisions of the Constitutional Court) because, in their view, they are all instruments which actually create generally applicable law.

(c) Equity, whereby the courts are empowered to formulate legal rules appropriate to the specific features of individual cases under their examination, relying on general principles of justice and the ethical awareness of the judge. 'The courts may take a decision based on equity only where: (a) there is a legal provision allowing it; (b) there is agreement between the parties and appeal to a higher court is possible; (c) the parties have previously agreed to rely on equity', Article 4 of the Civil Code.

(d) Usage, in other words repeated social practices that are not considered to be mandatory but are regarded as important in legal transactions, in particular in the formalisation of legal relations, especially in the field of commerce. Usage may be taken into account by the courts where provided for by law and where it is not 'contrary to the principles of good faith' (Article 3 of the Civil Code). Legal rules cannot therefore be created independently through usage, and many do not consider usage to be a genuine source of law.

(e) Legal theory, or the opinions of legal writers, should not be regarded as a genuine source of law, although it plays an important role in the scientific and technical development of legal knowledge and has significant repercussions on the final result of the work of those responsible for interpreting and applying legal rules.

3. Hierarchy of the sources of law

When reference is made to the hierarchy of laws, what is meant is the relative status of the different instruments, in other words their position in an ordered scale.

Some argue in this connection that a hierarchy can be established only on the basis of the method of creation. According to this view, the hierarchy is not based on the relative status of legal rules but is established between the sources by which they were created.

Whichever view is taken, an order of precedence can be drawn up.

The hierarchical order of the different sources listed in section 1 is as follows:

1. the Constitution and constitutional laws;
2. the rules and principles of general or common international law and international agreements (i.e. all the instruments referred to in section 1(b));
3. laws and decree-laws;
4. regional legislative decrees;
5. instruments having an effect equivalent to that of laws;
6. regulations.

4. Procedures for bringing international rules into force in Portugal

International legislative instruments are transposed into Portuguese law in accordance with the following principles set out in Article 8 of the Portuguese Constitution:

- (a) 'The rules and principles of general or common international law form an integral part of Portuguese law'.
- (b) 'The rules set out in duly ratified or approved international agreements shall come into force in Portuguese national law once they have been officially published, and shall remain so for as long as they are internationally binding on the Portuguese State'.
- (c) 'Rules issued by the competent bodies of international organisations to which Portugal belongs shall come directly into force in Portuguese national law, on condition that this is laid down in the respective constituent treaties'.
- (d) 'The provisions of the treaties that govern the European Union and the rules issued by its institutions in the exercise of their respective responsibilities shall apply in Portuguese national law in accordance with Union law and with respect for the fundamental principles of a democratic State based on the rule of law'.

5. The various authorities empowered to adopt rules of law

The authorities empowered to adopt rules of law are the Assembly of the Republic, the Government, the Regional Governments and Legislative Assemblies of the Azores and Madeira, local authorities and certain administrative authorities.

6. Process for adopting these rules of law

The way in which rules are adopted varies according to the specific procedures to be followed by each body responsible for adopting the rules. The different types of legislative instrument are therefore generated through different processes. The two most formal and most important procedures for adopting legal rules are described below.

The most complex procedure, involving the Assembly of the Republic, comprises the following steps:

- (a) Initiation of legislation: the power to initiate legislation lies 'with Members, parliamentary groups and the Government, and also, subject to the terms and conditions laid down by law, with groups of registered electors. The power to initiate legislation in relation to the autonomous regions shall lie with the respective Legislative Assembly' (Article 167(1) of the Constitution).
- (b) Initial admission, publication, registration, numbering and assessment: this phase involves consideration of the admissibility of the bill, publication of the text in the Assembly of the Republic's Official Gazette, administrative processing and, finally, evaluation of its content.
- (c) Discussion and approval: this involves a debate on general issues, another debate on specific points, a vote on the bill as a whole, a vote on specific points and a final overall vote. For a bill to be passed, a simple majority, an absolute majority or a qualified majority may be required.
- (d) Scrutiny by the President of the Republic within the period laid down by law, following which he either promulgates the proposed text or exercises his right of veto. In the latter case, the measure is discussed again by the Assembly of the Republic. If the vote is confirmed or amendments are made, the text is again forwarded to the President for promulgation, which must also take place within a pre-established period of time. The President of the Republic is responsible for 'promulgating laws, decree-laws and regulatory decrees and ordering their publication, and signing resolutions of the Assembly of the Republic that approve international agreements and other Government decrees' (Article 134(b) of the Constitution).

(e) Publication: once it has been promulgated, the President must order the text of the new legislation to be published in the Official Gazette of the Portuguese Republic.

The procedure whereby the Government adopts legislation comprises the following main steps:

(a) Initiation of legislation: draft legislation is put forward by the office of the minister concerned.

(b) Enquiry: during this stage, the minister proposing the draft must canvass opinions, and the bodies specified by the Constitution and by law must also be consulted.

(c) Preliminary and detailed assessment: proposals are examined and evaluated once they have been initially endorsed.

(d) Approval: although certain types of legislation do not have to be approved by the Council of Ministers, the latter is usually responsible for approving the draft.

(e) Scrutiny: 'within forty days of the receipt of any government decree for promulgation, ... the President of the Republic shall either promulgate the decree or exercise his right of veto. In the latter case, he shall inform the Government in writing of the reasons for so doing' (Article 136(4) of the Constitution).

(f) Publication of the definitive text in the Official Gazette of the Portuguese Republic.

7. Procedures for bringing national rules into force

'Laws shall be binding only after publication in the Official Gazette'. 'Once a law has been published, it shall enter into force after the period stipulated in the law itself has elapsed or, where no such period is stipulated, after the period provided for in special legislation' (Article 5 of the Civil Code).

Under Article 2 of Law No 74/98 of 11 November 1998, as amended by Law No 26/2006 of 30 June 2006:

'1. Legislative instruments and other acts of a general nature shall enter into force on the date laid down therein; under no circumstances may they enter into force on the date of publication.

2. If no date is set, the acts referred to in paragraph 1 shall enter into force throughout Portuguese territory and abroad on the fifth day following publication.

4. The time period referred to in paragraph 2 shall start from the day immediately following publication on the internet site managed by Imprensa Nacional Casa da Moeda, SA.'

8. Means for settling possible conflicts between different legal rules

The most important role in this connection is played by the Constitutional Court, which must declare to be unconstitutional any rules that conflict with the Portuguese Constitution or the principles enshrined therein.

When considering specific cases laid before them, the courts cannot apply provisions that infringe the Constitution or the principles deriving from it.

During the interpretation process carried out with a view to weighing up the facts submitted for their consideration, the courts must settle any conflicts arising between different legal rules, always having regard to the above-mentioned hierarchy of sources. In doing so, they must consider the system as a unified whole, without acknowledging any gaps or inconsistencies, in particular of a logical or semantic nature, weighing up the circumstances underlying the adoption of the rules and the specific conditions prevailing at the time the proceedings take place, always requiring a minimum correspondence in wording, even if imperfectly expressed, with the approach taken in the legislation and assuming that the legislature opted for the 'most judicious' solutions and was able to 'express its intentions in appropriate terms' (Article 9 of the Civil Code).

As far as conflicts between rules in the area of private international law are concerned, please refer to the theme Applicable law - Portugal.

Legal databases

 Digesto is Portugal's official legal database and contains the Official Gazette (Diário da República).

Types of access

Free access

Access to the site is free.

Visitors can search by type, number and date of publication to obtain:

- Summaries and full texts of legislative acts
- Dates of entry into force

Subscriber access

- Information that has been annotated, catalogued and organised under different headings

Electronic Diário da República

Types of access

Free access

Visitors can search by type, number and date of publication to obtain:

- Summaries and full texts of legislative acts

Subscriber access

- Search by text

Brief description of content

Legislative databases

The following legislative databases exist in Portugal:

PCMLEX – central database of the Digesto system

- Diário da República, Series I
- Main legislative and administrative acts published in the Diário da República, Series II

LEGAÇOR – Azores regional legislative database

- Official Gazette of the Azores, Series I

Non-legislative databases

The following non-legislative databases exist in Portugal:

DGO-Dout – Specific database containing circulars and opinions issued by the Directorate-General for the Budget

DGAP-Opinio – Specific database of the Directorate-General for Public Administration

REGTRAB – Specific database for labour agreements

Interoperability

Digesto is integrated with:

- Diário da República (Official Gazette)
- Assembly of the Republic (Portuguese Parliament)
- Constitutional Court
- Supreme Court of Justice
- Supreme Administrative Court
- Courts of Appeal
- Opinions of the Advisory Board of the Attorney-General's Office

- Eur-lex

The Electronic Diário da República is integrated with:

- Diário da República (Official Gazette)
- Judgments of the Supreme Administrative Court
- Official Journal of the European Union

Useful links

Diário da República - Portugal

---

The national language version of this page is maintained by the respective Member State. The translations have been done by the European Commission service. Possible changes introduced in the original by the competent national authority may not be yet reflected in the translations. The European Commission accepts no responsibility or liability whatsoever with regard to any information or data contained or referred to in this document. Please refer to the legal notice to see copyright rules for the Member State responsible for this page.

Last update: 18/07/2017

Member State law - Romania

 Please note that the original language version of this page ro has been amended recently. The language version you are now viewing is currently being prepared by our translators.

This page provides information on the Romanian legal system and an overview of Romanian law.

---

Sources of law

Sources of Romanian law are:

- The Romanian Constitution;
- Laws adopted by the Parliament (constitutional laws, organic laws and ordinary laws);
- Decrees of the Romanian President;
- Government legislative acts (orders, emergency orders, decisions);
- Legislative acts issued by the central government administration (ministerial orders, instructions and regulations);
- Legislative acts issued by the local government administration (County Councils, Local Councils, Bucharest General Council);
- EU legislation (regulations, directives);
- International treaties to which Romania is party.

Types of legal instruments - description

The Romanian legal framework includes the following legal instruments:

- The Constitution is Romania's supreme law. It regulates the structure of Romania as a national, unitary and indivisible State, the relations between executive, legislative and judicial power and between State bodies, citizens, and legal persons.
- Constitutional laws emanate from the constituent power - i.e. from the constituent assembly elected and convened for that purpose.
- Organic laws regulate areas of high importance to the State, such as the state borders, Romanian citizenship, the state coat of arms and the state seal, the legal arrangements for property and inheritance, the organisation and holding of referenda, criminal offences, sentences and the rules on the serving of sentences, the organisation and functioning of the Superior Council of Magistracy, of the courts, of the Public Prosecution Service and the Court of Accounts, the rights of individuals who are harmed by a public authority, national defence, the organisation of Government bodies, political parties.
- Ordinary laws regulate all other areas which are not covered by organic laws. An ordinary law cannot amend or modify a higher norm, such as an organic law or the Constitution.

- In special cases (Parliamentary recesses) certain areas, as determined by the Parliament, can, on the basis of a legislative delegation, be regulated by government orders. Such orders are issued on the basis of a special act of empowerment, within the limits and under the conditions laid down by that act. In emergency situations, the Government can issue emergency orders in any area if considered necessary.
- Government decisions determine how laws are to be effectively implemented and other various organisational aspects of their implementation.
- legislative acts issued by the central government administration (orders and instructions) are issued only on the basis of and in order to implement laws, Government decisions and Government orders.
- acts of autonomous administrative authorities
- legislative acts issued by local government administration (County Councils, Local Councils, Bucharest General Council) regulate areas that fall within the competence of local government authorities.

Other sources of law

- The ECHR case-law and EU courts' case-law.
- Whilst national case-law is not a source of law, decisions by the High Court of Cassation and Justice in order to ensure the uniform interpretation of certain law provisions unquestionably represent secondary sources of law. In addition, decisions of the Constitutional Court that produce effects erga omnes and not inter partes litigantes may be regarded as secondary sources of law.
- Pursuant to Article 1 of Law No 287/2009 on the Civil Code, sources of civil law may be the law, practices and general principles of law. By 'practices' we mean tradition (customs) and professional practices.
- The provisions referred to above set out the following rules for applying practices as a source of law:
  - practices apply in cases not provided for by law. Where no practices exist, the legal provisions on similar situations apply, and when no such provisions exist, the general principles of law apply.
  - in matters regulated by law, practices apply only where the law makes explicit reference to them.
  - only practices that are in line with public policy and accepted principles of morality may be recognised as sources of law.
  - the interested party must prove the existence of practices and their content. Practices published in collections drawn up by bodies or organisations authorised in the field are presumed to exist until proven otherwise.

Hierarchy of norms

The Romanian hierarchy of norms is as follows:

- The Romanian Constitution and constitutional laws are at the top of the hierarchy of norms. All other pieces of legislation and norms must comply with them.
- Organic laws are in second position in the legal hierarchy. The Parliament adopts organic laws by qualified majority.
- Ordinary laws are the third category of legal norms. The Parliament adopts ordinary laws by simplified majority. An ordinary law cannot amend or modify organic laws or the Constitution.
- Government orders are the fourth category of norms.
- Government decisions are the fifth category of norms in the legal hierarchy;
- Legislative acts issued by central government administration and by autonomous administrative authorities are the sixth category of norms in the legal hierarchy.
- Legislative acts issued by the local government administration (County Councils, Local Councils, Bucharest General Council) hold the lowest position in the hierarchy of norms.

Institutional framework

Institutions responsible for the adoption of legislation

Under the Constitution, the State is founded on constitutional democracy principles of the separation of powers (legislative, executive and judicial) and on the principles of the balance of power and of checks and balances.

Power is also split between and exercised by the Parliament, the Government and Judicial authorities. The Constitutional Court, the Romanian Ombudsman, the Court of Accounts and the Legislative Council also guarantee the balance of power between public authorities and citizens.

The Parliament is citizens' supreme representative organ and the only legislative authority of the country. It is made up of the Chamber of Deputies and the Senate. In principle, legislative power is exclusive to the Parliament, but in certain cases, it shares this function with the executive (Government) and the electorate (citizens).

The Government may issue orders, on the basis of a specific law of empowerment adopted by the Parliament. In exceptional emergency circumstances which must be addressed urgently, the Government may also issue emergency orders.

The legislative decision-making process

The legislative decision-making process is composed of three phases:

1. The governmental phase or the pre-parliamentary stage refers to:

- the drawing up and adoption at government level of the draft legislative act;
- the submission of the draft legislative act to public debate, under the conditions laid down by law;
- endorsement by the Legislative Council, inter-ministerial endorsement and endorsement by other institutions;
- adoption at government level of the draft legislative act.

2. The parliamentary phase refers to:

- the transmission of the draft legislative act to one of the Chambers of Parliament (the Chamber of Deputies or the Senate as first chamber), depending on the competences established by the Romanian Constitution;
- discussion and adoption of the report/opinion on the draft legislative act in the standing parliamentary committees (in some situations special committees may be constituted);
- in the plenary session, the First Chamber pronounces on the draft legislative acts and legislative proposals referred to it. The first Chamber has 45 days to pronounce on draft legislative acts and legislative proposals, starting from the date when they are presented before the Parliament Standing Bureau.
- In the case of codes or other particularly complex laws, the deadline is 60 days from the date when they are presented before the Standing Bureau.
- For Government emergency orders, the deadline is 30 days.
- In the event that the deadline is exceeded, the draft legislative act or legislative proposal is considered adopted and is forwarded to the Chamber of Deputies, which takes the final decision.

Draft legislative acts/legislative proposals are then voted on (admitted or rejected) and forwarded to the Decisional Chamber (the Chamber of Deputies or the Senate), which adopts the final version of the legislative act.

3. The post-parliamentary phase refers to:

- the constitutionality control of the law (a priori control) (the Constitutional Court confirms that the law is compatible with the Constitution). This check may be requested by the Romanian President, the President of one of the Chambers, the Government, the High Court of Cassation and Justice, the Romanian Ombudsman, or by at least 50 deputies or at least 25 senators. It may also be carried out ex-officio.
- Finally the law is promulgated by the President within 20 days of its reception. If the President requests the re-examination of the law (such a request may be made once only) or the examination of its constitutionality, the law is to be promulgated within 10 days of its reception after its re-examination or after receipt of the confirmation of its compliance with the Constitution from the Constitutional Court.
- The law enters into force within three days of its publication in the Romanian Official Gazette, Part I, or at a later date mentioned in the law.

Legal databases

A Romanian legal database, designed, administered and updated by the Legislative Council provides public access free of charge to Romanian legislation.

This is the online version of the Repertoriul legislației României® [Romanian Legislative Directory] – the official record of Romanian legislation, which provides precise and correct information on the legal status of each law at different moments in time.

The database covers the period from 1864 to the present.

Data may be accessed using the following search criteria:

- Category/type of legislative act;
- Number;
- Year (period) of issue;
- Publication interval;
- Official publication (type, number, year);
- keywords in the title;
- Status of the act (in force, no longer in force);
- Other criteria (legislative, individual/published, unpublished).

The intranet of the Legislative Council hosts a database updated with detailed legal information needed for the specific activity of endorsing draft legislative acts or for the provision of information of use in the legislative process.

Another legal database (although organised differently) can be accessed from the website of the Chamber of Deputies (one of the chambers of Parliament). Searches may be carried out by:

- Type of legislative act;
- Number;
- Date;
- Public authority which issued the legislative act;
- Date of publication and the keywords (both in the title and the main text of the act).

Is access to the database free of charge?

Yes, access to the database is free of charge.

---

The national language version of this page is maintained by the respective Member State. The translations have been done by the European Commission service. Possible changes introduced in the original by the competent national authority may not be yet reflected in the translations. The European Commission accepts no responsibility or liability whatsoever with regard to any information or data contained or referred to in this document. Please refer to the legal notice to see copyright rules for the Member State responsible for this page.

Last update: 20/03/2014

Member State law - Slovenia

 Please note that the original language version of this page SI has been amended recently. The language version you are now viewing is currently being prepared by our translators.

This page provides you with information on the legal system in Slovenia.

---

Sources of law

Types of legal instruments – description

Abstract legal norms in the legal system of the Republic of Slovenia are adopted at both the state and local level. The legal instruments at state level are the Constitution (ustava), laws/acts (zakoni) and implementing regulations, which fall into two main categories: decrees (uredbe, occasionally translated as regulations) and rules (pravilniki).

Local councils principally adopt ordinances (odloki).

The legal system in Slovenia does not recognise judicial precedence, which means that lower-instance courts (nižja sodišča) are not formally bound by the decisions of higher-instance courts (višja sodišča). However, lower-instance courts tend to observe and follow the case law of higher-instance courts and the Supreme Court (Vrhovno sodišče).

The Supreme Court, sitting in a plenary session, may adopt legal opinions of principle (načelna pravna mnenja) on issues important to the uniform application of laws/acts. Under the Courts Act (Zakon o sodiščih), such legal opinions of principle are only binding on panels of the Supreme Court and may be changed only at a new plenary session. However, lower-instance courts tend to observe legal opinions of principle, and the Supreme Court, in its case law, demands that due consideration be given to a party quoting an already adopted legal opinion on the issue in question.

Laws/acts and other regulations must comply with generally accepted principles of international law, and with treaties that are binding on Slovenia (as set out in Article 8 of the Constitution). Ratified and published international treaties must be applied directly. The position of the Slovenian Constitutional Court (Ustavno sodišče) is that international treaties rank above statutory provisions in the hierarchy of legal acts. Ratified international treaties are integrated into the national legal system, thereby creating rights and obligations for natural and legal persons in the country (provided they are directly enforceable).

The Slovenian legal system belongs to the continental legal family and is a civil law system, which means that customary law is not, as such, a part of the legal system. However, customary law enjoys some recognition by Slovenian law. For example, under Article 12 of the Obligations Code (Obligacijski zakonik), which regulates contracts between natural and legal persons, business customs, usages and practice established between parties are taken into consideration in the assessment of the action required and its effects on the obligatory relationships of commercial entities.

In exercising his or her judicial office, a judge is bound by the Constitution, laws/acts, general principles of international law and ratified and published international treaties. The Courts Act provides that, if a civil law matter cannot be solved on the basis of valid regulations, the judge must take into account the regulations that apply in similar cases. If, in spite of this, the solution to the matter remains legally doubtful, he or she must make a decision based on the general principles of the national legal order. In this, he or she must act in accordance with the legal tradition and the established principles of jurisprudence. The judge must always act as if he or she has before him or her an indefinite number of cases of the same kind.

Hierarchy of norms

All legal norms must be in conformity with the Constitution. Laws/acts and other regulations must comply with generally accepted principles of international law, and with treaties that are binding on Slovenia (as set out in Article 8 of the Constitution). Implementing regulations and local ordinances must, in addition, be in conformity with laws/acts.

General acts issued for the exercise of public authority (splošni akti za izvrševanje javnih pooblastil) must be in conformity with the Constitution, laws/acts and implementing regulations.

Individual acts and the actions of state authorities, local community authorities and bearers of public authority must be based on an adopted law/act or statutory regulation.

As to the primacy of law of the European Union, the Constitution provides the basis for the Slovenian legal system to accept its primacy, by stating that legal acts and decisions adopted within international organisations to which Slovenia has transferred the exercise of part of its sovereign rights (in this case, the European Union) must be applied in Slovenia in accordance with the legal regulation of these organisations.

Institutional framework

Institutions responsible for the adoption of norms

Laws/acts are adopted by the lower chamber of the Slovenian bicameral parliament, the National Assembly (Državni zbor). In line with Articles 80 and 81 of the Constitution, the National Assembly is composed of 90 deputies representing the citizens of Slovenia. Eighty-eight deputies are elected by universal, equal, direct and secret vote. One deputy of the Italian national community and one deputy of the Hungarian national community must always be elected to the National Assembly by the members of those communities. The National Assembly is elected for a term of four years.

Decrees are issued by the Government (Vlada), whereas rules are issued by individual ministers of the government. In line with Articles 110–119 of the Constitution, the government is composed of a Prime Minister (predsednik vlade) and ministers. Within the scope of their powers, the government and individual ministers are independent and accountable to the National Assembly, which can impeach them (before the Constitutional Court), vote on confidence or terminate their office by way of interpellation. The Prime Minister is elected by the National Assembly, after which he or she proposes the ministers to be appointed (and dismissed) by the National Assembly.

The Constitutional Court plays a crucial role in the institutional framework, as it may annul laws/acts, implementing regulations and local ordinances it deems unconstitutional. It also issues opinions on the constitutionality of international treaties and decides on individual constitutional complaints of aggrieved citizens, which may be lodged after all other remedies have been exhausted.

Local ordinances are adopted by local councils (občinski sveti, mestni sveti) that are directly elected by residents of a municipality.

Decision-making process

The adoption of laws/acts can be proposed to the National Assembly by the government, by individual deputies of the National Assembly, by the upper chamber of the Parliament – the National Council (Državni svet), and by five thousand voters. According to its Rules of Procedure (Poslovnik Državnega zbora), the regular procedure in the National Assembly consists of three readings of the proposed law/act.

In addition, an expedited, emergency procedure is envisaged by the Rules of Procedure. According to Article 86, the National Assembly may pass a decision if a majority of the deputies are present and if the law/act is adopted by a majority of votes cast by those deputies present, unless a different type of majority is stipulated. The National Council may veto an adopted law/act, and the National Assembly can override such a veto by a majority of all deputies.

The legislative referendum (Zakonodajni referendum) (as defined in Article 90 of the Constitution) is regulated in the Referendum and Public Initiative Act (Zakon o referendumu in o ljudski iniciativi) and can be instituted by the National Assembly itself or, following a request from the National Council, one third of the deputies or forty thousand voters. The voters have the opportunity to confirm or reject a law/act adopted by the National Assembly before it is promulgated by the President of the Republic (Predsednik republike).

The President of the Republic must promulgate an adopted law/act within eight days of its adoption. Pursuant to Article 154 of the Constitution, all norms must be published before they can enter into force. Legal norms adopted by state institutions are published in the Official Gazette of the Republic of Slovenia (Uradni list Republike Slovenije; UL RS), whereas ordinances and other local regulations are published in local gazettes.

Amendments to the Constitution are adopted through a special procedure laid down by the Constitution. A proposal to amend the Constitution may be made by 20 deputies of the National Assembly, the Government or thirty thousand voters. Such a proposal is decided upon by the National Assembly by a two-thirds majority vote of deputies present, but an amendment may be adopted only if approved by a two-thirds majority vote of all deputies. Article 87 of the Constitution states that the rights and duties of citizens and other persons may be determined by the National Assembly only by law.

EU regulations and decisions issued by the EU institutions are directly applicable in the Republic of Slovenia. They need not be ratified and published in UL RS in order to be applicable.

International treaties of which the Republic of Slovenia is a signatory enter into force once they have been ratified by the National Assembly through a specific procedure. International treaties are ratified by the adoption of a law tabled by the government. A law on the ratification of an international treaty is adopted if passed by a simple majority of the deputies present, except where stipulated otherwise by the Constitution or law.

Legal databases

Register of Regulations of the Republic of Slovenia (Register predpisov RS)

The Register of Regulations database contains links to the full texts of laws that have been adopted since 25 June 1991 and implementing regulations adopted since 1995. Access to the full texts of other implementing regulations depends on the time needed to post an electronic version on the UL RS site.

Legislation of the National Assembly (Zakonodaja državnega zbora)

The Legislation of the National Assembly database contains texts of all laws/acts and other acts under discussion by the National Assembly. These include:

- Consolidated Texts of laws/acts (prečiščena besedila zakonov) – officially consolidated texts of laws/acts adopted after 29 November 2002 and published in UL RS, and unofficially consolidated texts as of 17 June 2007;
- Adopted laws/acts (sprejeti zakoni) – laws/acts adopted by the National Assembly and published in UL RS since independence on 25 June 1991;

- Adopted Acts (sprejeti akti) – acts adopted by the National Assembly and published in the Official Gazette of the Republic of Slovenia since 28 November 1996;
- Draft laws/acts (predlogi zakonov) – draft laws/acts submitted for discussion in the current term of office of the National Assembly (the database also contains adopted draft laws/acts that have not yet been published in UL RS);
- Readings of laws/acts (obravnave zakonov) (end of procedure) – archive of all readings of a law/act submitted for discussion in the National Assembly after 28 November 1996;
- Draft Acts (predlogi aktov) – draft acts submitted for discussion in the current term of office of the National Assembly (the database also contains adopted draft acts that have not yet been published in UL RS);
- Readings of Acts (obravnave aktov) (end of procedure) – archive of all readings of an Act submitted for discussion in the National Assembly after 28 November 1996;
- Draft Ordinances (predlogi odlokov) – draft ordinances submitted for discussion in the current term of office of the National Assembly (the database also contains adopted draft ordinances that have not yet been published in UL RS);
- Readings of Ordinances (obravnave odlokov) (end of procedure) – archive of all readings of an Ordinance submitted for discussion in the National Assembly after 28 November 1996.

Legal Information System (Pravno-informacijski sistem – PIS)

The Legal Information System – Register of regulations of the Republic of Slovenia (Register predpisov Republike Slovenije) is linked to the collection of regulations of other state bodies and UL RS.

Official Gazette of the Republic of Slovenia (Uradni list Republike Slovenije; UL RS)

All national regulations are officially published in the Official Gazette of the Republic of Slovenia. All documents are published online.

Related links

Slovenian legal system, legislation of the National Assembly, Legal Information System, Official Gazette of the Republic of Slovenia \(UL RS\)

---

The national language version of this page is maintained by the respective Member State. The translations have been done by the European Commission service. Possible changes introduced in the original by the competent national authority may not be yet reflected in the translations. The European Commission accepts no responsibility or liability whatsoever with regard to any information or data contained or referred to in this document. Please refer to the legal notice to see copyright rules for the Member State responsible for this page.

Last update: 02/11/2016

Member State law - Slovakia

Please note that the original language version of this page sk has been amended recently. The language version you are now viewing is currently being prepared by our translators.

This page provides you with information about the legal system in Slovakia. Please see the page of Legal order – Slovakia on the European Judicial Network: civil justice legal order.

Sources of law

Types of legal instruments – description

The term ‘sources of law’ is used in three senses:

1. sources of law in the material sense – material sources of law
2. sources of law in the epistemological sense – sources of knowledge of law
3. sources of law in the formal sense – formal sources of law

On the basis of how legal norms emerged and the binding form in which they are expressed, the following types of sources of law are traditionally distinguished:

- legal custom,
- precedent (judge-made law),
- legislation,
- normative contracts,
- general legal principles,
- common sense,
- contemporary books, legal literature and expert opinions,
- international treaties, where duly incorporated into the legal order of the Slovak Republic.

Hierarchy of legal norms

One of the basic principles of the Slovak legal order is the hierarchy of norms. Understanding the proper place of this principle in legislative practice and implementation is vital. The hierarchy of norms is not, however, simply a question of straightforward logical precedence or subordination. Hierarchy relates to the entire issue of legitimate authority and also includes the categorical imperative that a piece of legislation may only be made by a body authorised to do so by law – within the limits of law and its own legislative powers.

Legislation is categorised by what is known as 'legal force'. Legal force refers to the properties of legal norms, one piece of legislation being subordinate to another (i.e. one with greater legal force), or where a legal norm is derived from one having greater legal force. In a situation involving legal norms with different legal force, the weaker norm may not contradict the stronger one, and the stronger norm may override the weaker one.

In terms of the levels of legal force, legislation may be hierarchically arranged as follows:

Primary legislation (laws)

- constitutional laws (always primary),
- laws (primary or derived from constitutional laws).

Secondary legislation (also referred to as subordinate legislation)

- government regulations – always secondary,
- legal norms of central government bodies – always secondary,
- legal norms of bodies of self-governing units (authorities) – primary or secondary,
- legal norms issued in exceptional circumstances by authorities other than government bodies – always secondary.

In the system of legislation, a law having precedence means that all other legal norms must derive from the law, be compatible with it and not contradict it. This means that, in practice, if a legal norm lower down the hierarchy contradicts a higher-ranking norm, it is the higher-ranking norm that must be followed.

Institutional framework

Institutions responsible for the adoption of legal norms

The bodies and authorities listed below have the power to adopt legislation (law-making bodies):

- the National Council of the Slovak Republic – the Constitution, constitutional laws, laws, international treaties higher than laws, international treaties with the force of a law,
- the Government of the Slovak Republic – government regulations,
- ministries and other central government bodies – implementing decisions, implementing decrees and measures,
- municipal and city assemblies – regulations of general application,
- citizens (voters) of the Slovak Republic – results of a referendum with the force of a constitutional law; results of a referendum with the force of a law,

- residents of a municipality or city – results of a local referendum with the force of a regulation of general application,
- municipal and city authorities and local government bodies –regulations of general application.

The legislative process

Stages of the legislative process:

- introducing a proposal for legislation – legislative initiative,
- debate on the bill,
- voting (decision on the bill),
- signing of the adopted bill,
- promulgation (publication) of the piece of legislation.

The decision-making process

The legislative process

Introducing a proposal for legislation – legislative initiative

Under Article 87(1) of Act No 460/1992 (the Constitution of the Slovak Republic), bills may be introduced by the following:

- committees of the National Council of the Slovak Republic,
- members of the National Council of the Slovak Republic (also referred to as Members of Parliament),
- The Government of the Slovak Republic.

Bills are submitted arranged in sections, together with explanatory notes.

Discussion of the bill

In accordance with the rules of procedure of the National Council of the Slovak Republic (Act No 350/1996), bills go through three readings:

1. The first reading involves a general debate on the substance or what is known as the 'philosophy' of the proposed law. At this stage, no amendments or additions may be proposed.
2. On the second reading, the bill is discussed by the National Council committee(s) to which it has been assigned. Every bill must also pass through the Constitutional Committee, in particular to ensure its compatibility with the Slovak Constitution, constitutional laws, international treaties binding on the Slovak Republic, laws, and EU law. Following this, amendments and additions may be proposed and are voted on once the committee discussions are completed. This is why the various positions must be brought together before the bill is discussed in the National Council of the Slovak Republic. The bill is sent to the National Council of the Slovak Republic once the Coordination Committee has approved the committees' joint report by a special resolution. This report forms the basis for the Slovak National Council's debate and vote on the bill in the second reading.
3. The third reading is restricted to those provisions of the bill for which amendments or additions were approved on the second reading. On third reading, the only changes that Members of Parliament can put forward are corrections of errors in legislative drafting, and grammar and spelling mistakes. Amendments and additions intended to eliminate any other errors must be put forward by at least thirty members of the National Council of the Slovak Republic. Once these have been debated, the bill is voted on as a whole.

Voting (decision on the bill)

For a law to be passed, at least half the members present must vote in favour of it.

The Constitution may be amended and individual articles repealed only if passed by a qualified majority, which means three-fifths of all members of the National Council of the Slovak Republic (3/5 of 150).

The National Council of the Slovak Republic is a quorum if at least half its members are present.

Signing the adopted bill

The adopted bill is signed by:

- the President of the Slovak Republic,
- the Speaker of the National Council of the Slovak Republic,
- the Prime Minister of the Slovak Republic.

This step in the procedure involves checking the content, procedural correctness and final form of the adopted bill. By signing, these highest-ranking constitutional officers endorse the wording of the law.

The President has the right to exercise a 'suspensive veto' and refuse to sign an adopted law on the grounds of faulty content. He or she must then send the adopted law, together with his or her comments, to the National Council of the Slovak Republic to be debated again.

The returned bill then goes through the second and third reading stages. At this point, the National Council of the Slovak Republic may – but does not have to – take the President's comments into account. The National Council of the Slovak Republic may overturn the 'suspensive veto' by voting again, in which case the law must be promulgated, even without the President's signature.

Promulgation (publication) of legislation

Promulgation is the final stage in the legislative process. Legislation applying to the country as a whole is formally published in the Collection of Legislative Acts (Zbierka zákonov) of the Slovak Republic; this publication falls within the remit of the Slovak Ministry of Justice.

Entry into force

Legislation takes effect upon publication.

Given their restricted territorial application, local legal norms are posted on an official notice board for a set period, generally 15 days.

Means of settling possible conflicts between the different sources of law

Legislation of lower legal force must not contradict legislation of greater legal force.

Legislation may only be amended or repealed by legislation of the same or greater legal force.

In practice, the rule in settling conflicts between legislation having the same legal force is that a more recent piece of legislation repeals or amends an older piece of legislation, or that a specific norm repeals or amends a general norm.

The Constitutional Court of the Slovak Republic reviews and rules on whether:

- laws conform with the Constitution;
- government regulations and legal norms of general application of ministries and other central government bodies conform to the Constitution, constitutional laws, and laws.
- regulations of general application issued by bodies of self-governing units conform to the Constitution and laws;
- legal norms of general application issued by local bodies of central administration conform to the Constitution and other legislation of general application;
- legislation of general application conforms with international treaties promulgated in the manner laid down by legislative promulgation law.

Where the Constitutional Court holds that there is conflict between pieces of legislation, such acts - or parts or provisions thereof - cease to be in effect. Where the bodies that made such an act fail to harmonise it with the applicable legislation having greater legal force within the statutory time limit following the issue of the ruling, the act - or parts or provisions thereof - is/are voided.

Legal databases

The JASPI database of the Ministry of Justice of the Slovak Republic

The JASPI database of the Slovak Ministry of Justice gives you access to:

- laws and other legislation,
- their consolidated versions following each amendment,
- international treaties and other sources of law (published in the Collection of Legislative Acts of the Slovak Republic),

- judicial decisions and opinions of the courts (published in Reports (Zbierka súdnych rozhodnutí) of the Supreme Court of the Slovak Republic),
- decisions, opinions and findings of the Constitutional Court of the Slovak Republic,
- selected decisions of regional and district courts,
- information about experts, translators and interpreters.

Other content available on the JASPI database includes:

- laws and other legislation published in the Collection of Legislative Acts of the Slovak Republic since 1945,
- updated texts of adopted laws, public notices and other legislation,
- texts of opinions and decisions of the Supreme Court of the Slovak Republic since 1961,
- documents of the Constitutional Court of the Slovak Republic since the establishment of the independent Slovak Republic (1 January 1993),
- selected decisions of regional and district courts,
- information about experts, translators and interpreters.

The JASPI database is an open, non-commercial system designed to provide citizens with free access to comprehensive legal information on the country. The purpose of the project is to provide fast and clear access to legal information.

The information system for 'legislative workflow' has two functional applications.

1. The first is the Draft Bills Editor application, the main function of which is to draft bills, amendments and combined amendments. The Editor automatically creates structured legal documents (XML structure) in line with the approved Legislative Rules of the Government of the Slovak Republic. In the case of amendments, the user can directly edit the consolidated version of a current legal document (acts, government regulations, etc.) and the application automatically creates an amended version. A user can view the consolidated version of a legal document with its highlighted amendments. The final output is a structured XML document. The bill is then published in the Portal for Legislative Workflow application in various formats.
2. The portal follows the legislative processes for all types of legal documents. Special attention is paid to interdepartmental consultation, which also involves public consultations (anybody may submit comments). Users of the portal can easily search for legal documents by several criteria, and can also be alerted by e-mail or RSS feed to changes in the legislative stages of the publication of new drafts in their chosen areas. The goal is to make the legislative process more transparent and accessible to everyone.

Related links

📄 Legislation portal of the Ministry of Justice of the Slovak Republic

---

The national language version of this page is maintained by the respective Member State. The translations have been done by the European Commission service. Possible changes introduced in the original by the competent national authority may not be yet reflected in the translations. The European Commission accepts no responsibility or liability whatsoever with regard to any information or data contained or referred to in this document. Please refer to the legal notice to see copyright rules for the Member State responsible for this page.

Last update: 18/03/2019

Member State law - Finland

This page provides you with information on the legal system in Finland.

---

Sources of law

The term 'sources of law' means the sources where legal rules are to be found. In Finland, some sources of law are national and others are international. Some sources are written, some unwritten. A summary of all sources of law is set out below.

Types of legal instruments – description

National sources of law

The most important national sources of law are written laws. The term 'laws' should in this context be interpreted broadly as meaning the Constitution, ordinary acts (also known as Acts of Parliament), decrees, whether issued by the President of the Republic, the Council of Ministers or ministries, and legal rules issued by lower-ranking authorities. Legal rules issued by lower-ranking authorities and decrees may be issued only under the authority of the Constitution or an ordinary Act, which normally specifies the state body or authority empowered to issue such a rule.

In circumstances where there is no written law, Chapter 1, Section 11 of the Code of Procedure provides that custom may be the source of law. For custom to be binding, it must be equitable. The rule of custom dates back a long way and its current notion is not very specific. 'Custom' today chiefly means certain established practices that occur, for example, in commercial activities. Because regulations provided for in written law are now fairly comprehensive, custom is nowadays only relatively rarely of importance as a source of law. In some areas, however, such as law of contract, customary law does have a fairly strong position even now.

Preparatory legislative work and court decisions are also sources of law. Preparatory legislative work provides information on the legislator's intention and, for that reason; such documents are used in the interpretation of legislation. Of the various court decisions, the most important as sources of law are those of the highest courts, namely the Supreme Court and the Supreme Administrative Court. The decisions of these two courts are called precedents. Although precedents are not legally binding, they have great importance in practice. The decisions of other courts may also be important as sources of law. Indeed, in circumstances in which the decision of a lower court is final, the practice of the lower courts may be of great practical importance.

Jurisprudence, general legal principles and factual arguments are also national sources of law. The specific task of jurisprudence is to research the content of the legal system – the interpretation and classification of legal rules – and for that reason it, too, is significant as a source of law. General legal principles and practical arguments can also have significance as sources of law. As will be shown below, the position of these sources in the hierarchy of sources of law is weaker than that of the other sources referred to above.

International sources of law and European Union law

International agreements and other international obligations to which Finland is committed are binding sources of law in Finland. The practice of the international bodies that apply such agreements also has significance as a source of law. One example of a source of law in this category is the Convention of the Council of Europe on Human Rights; thus the practice of the European Court of Human Rights is relevant to the interpretation of the Convention.

As a member of the European Union, Finland is also bound by its laws, regulations and directives. These are among the most important legislation of the European Union. Regulations are directly applicable to all member states and member states must implement its directives. Preliminary work in implementing legislation may, therefore, also draw some significance from how EU law is interpreted, although that significance is clearly far less than is the case for preparatory work for national legislation.

Other EU regulatory instruments are binding on Finland to the same extent as they are binding upon other member states. The rulings of the Court of Justice of the European Communities are also of significance as a source of law, because they are part of the body of EU law.

Hierarchy of norms

Finnish sources of law are customarily divided into strongly binding, weakly binding and admissible sources. Acts and custom are strongly binding sources. They therefore occupy the highest position in the hierarchy. It is the official duty of the law enforcement authorities to apply them; to set them aside is deemed misconduct in office. The hierarchy of national legislation is as follows:

1. Constitution
2. Ordinary Acts (Acts of Parliament)
3. Decrees issued by the President of the Republic, the Council of Ministers and ministries
4. Legal rules issued by lower-ranking authorities.

Weakly binding sources of law, namely the ones that rank lower in the hierarchy, consist of preparatory legislative work and court decisions. Disregard of these sources does not result in a sanction for misconduct in office against the enforcement authority, but the likelihood of a decision being challenged in a higher court increases. The admissible sources of law categories include jurisprudence, general legal principles and factual arguments. Admissible sources of law are not binding, but they may be used to bolster an argument and thereby strengthen the grounds on which a decision is based.

International agreements have the same hierarchical ranking as the instrument used to implement them in Finland. Thus, if an international agreement is implemented by an Act, the provisions of that agreement have the hierarchical ranking of the provisions of the Act. If, however, an international obligation is implemented pursuant to a decree, its provisions have the hierarchical rank of the provisions of the decree. Implementing provisions are therefore analogous to national provisions of the same hierarchical rank.

Institutional framework

Institutions responsible for the adoption of legal rules

Under the Finnish Constitution, legislative power in Finland is vested in Parliament. Parliament enacts all ordinary Acts and also determines amendments to the Constitution. Acts or basic laws enacted by Parliament may vest certain other bodies with the authority to issue legal rules on given matters. On the basis of such authorisation, the President of the Republic, the government and a ministry may issue decrees. Where there is no provision specifying who is to issue a decree, it is issued by the government. A lower-ranking authority may also, in certain circumstances, be authorised by an Act to lay down legal rules on given matters. This occurs where there are specific grounds relating to the subject matter of the rules concerned, and where the material significance of those rules does not require that they be laid down by an Act or a decree. The scope of such authorisation must also be clearly defined. No bodies other than those referred to above have authority to issue generally binding legal rules.

Decision - making process

Enactment and entry into force of legal rules

In order for legislation to be enacted, it must be presented to Parliament for consideration as a government proposal or as an initiative by a Member of Parliament. Government proposals are prepared in ministries and are subsequently discussed at the government plenary session. After that, the decision on whether to bring the government proposal before Parliament is made at the presidential session.

In Parliament, a government proposal is first the subject of a preliminary debate, after which it is assigned to a parliamentary committee for consideration. The committee hears experts and drafts a report on the government proposal. The matter is then referred to a plenary session of Parliament, where the report of the parliamentary committee acts as a basis for discussion. The decision to pass a Bill is taken at a plenary session of Parliament in two readings. Parliament may pass a bill without amending it, amend it or reject it. The final decision on the fate of a Bill therefore lies with Parliament. Ordinary Bills are passed in Parliament by means of a simple majority, whereas an amendment to the Constitution requires a stipulated majority.

Once a Bill has been passed by Parliament, it is forwarded to the President of the Republic for approval. An Act enters into force at the time specified in the Bill, but not before it has been published in the legal gazette, 'Statutes of Finland'.

Decrees issued by the President of the Republic, the government or a ministry are prepared in the ministry that deals with the matter. Where presidential decrees are concerned, the President of the Republic makes a decision to issue a decree acting on proposals presented by the government. The issuing of government decrees is determined at government plenary sessions, and the issuing of ministerial decrees is determined by the ministry concerned. All decrees are published in the Statutes of Finland. A decree enters into force at the time specified in the decree itself, but does not, in any event, enter into force before the decree has been published in the Statutes of Finland.

Legal rules laid down by lower-ranking authorities – which are, in practice, usually called either decisions or rules and regulations – are prepared by the authority concerned, which also decides on their adoption. Regulations adopted by lower-ranking authorities enter into force at the time provided for and are published in the compendium of rules and regulations of the authority concerned.

Legal databases

Finlex

 Finlex is a legal databank with over thirty databases. Legislative information in Finlex is organised into six databases. It includes, among other things:

- The database of translations of Finnish acts and decrees, including translations of Finnish Acts of Parliament (mostly in English)
- The consolidated texts of acts and decrees (in Finnish and in Swedish)
- A reference database that includes a list of changes made to any act or decree
- Sámi language acts and decrees.

The translations of Finnish Acts and decrees (mostly in English) are in one database. The original texts of Acts and decrees are in separate databases. The most recent Acts are found in the electronic statutes of Finland.

Case law in Finlex consists of over ten databases. These include the precedents set by the Supreme Court and cases of the Supreme Administrative Court, the courts of appeal, the administrative courts and special courts.

Other Finlex databases include international treaties, secondary legislation and government bills.

Access to the database is free of charge.

Other databases

In addition to Finlex, databases on legislation, case law, government bills and legal literature are also available in Finland. Edilex and Suomen laki provide comprehensive on-line legal information services. Both Edilex and Suomen laki contain databases of national legislation, case law and other material. Subscription is required for most of the services. WSOYPro is the third commercial legal information service in Finland. Most materials are restricted to subscribers.

---

The national language version of this page is maintained by the respective Member State. The translations have been done by the European Commission service. Possible changes introduced in the original by the competent national authority may not be yet reflected in the translations. The European Commission accepts no responsibility or liability whatsoever with regard to any information or data contained or referred to in this document. Please refer to the legal notice to see copyright rules for the Member State responsible for this page.

Last update: 24/05/2018

Member State law - Sweden

This page provides you with information on the legal system in Sweden.

---

Sources of law

There are four main sources of law in Sweden: legislation, preparatory legislative material, case law and academic literature.

Legislation is the primary source. It is printed and promulgated in the Swedish Code of Statutes. Legislation is divided into acts, ordinances and regulations. Acts are adopted by the Riksdag (Swedish Parliament), ordinances are adopted by the Government and regulations are issued by the authorities.

The Riksdag is the only public body with the authority to adopt new laws or to amend existing legislation. Legislation that has been adopted can only be repealed or amended by a new decision from the Riksdag.

Decisions from the courts, case law, play an important part in the application of the law. This particularly applies to decisions from the highest instances, the Supreme Court and the Supreme Administrative Court.

Preparatory work on proposed laws, i.e. the texts that are created in connection with the legislative process, are also used in the application of the law.

Decision-making process

New acts or amendments to existing acts are usually proposed by the Government. Before the Government submits a proposal to the Riksdag for a new piece of legislation it generally needs to examine available alternatives carefully. A specially appointed commission of inquiry is assigned this task.

Before the Riksdag decides whether to adopt a proposed law or amendment, the proposal must be considered by members of the Riksdag in a parliamentary committee. There are fifteen committees, each with its own area of responsibility, such as transport or education.

When a committee has presented its recommendations to the Chamber – in the form of a committee report – on what decision the Riksdag should take on the Government's and members' proposals, all the members of the Riksdag debate the proposed law and a final decision is taken.

It is the Government's responsibility to implement the Riksdag's decisions and ensure that they are enforced in the way intended by the Riksdag. The Government Offices, including all ministries and some 300 public agencies, assist the Government in this task.

All laws and ordinances are published in the Swedish Code of Statutes (Svensk Författningssamling, SFS), which is available in printed form and on the Internet.

Legal databases

You can find legal information on public administration on Lagrummet. Links to access legal information from the Government, the Riksdag, higher courts and government agencies are available from this portal.

Access to the portal is free of charge.

---

The national language version of this page is maintained by the respective Member State. The translations have been done by the European Commission service. Possible changes introduced in the original by the competent national authority may not be yet reflected in the translations. The European Commission accepts no responsibility or liability whatsoever with regard to any information or data contained or referred to in this document. Please refer to the legal notice to see copyright rules for the Member State responsible for this page.

Last update: 22/10/2015

Member State law - England and Wales

This page provides you with information on law and legal databases relating to the legal system in the United Kingdom. There are three distinct legal jurisdictions in the United Kingdom – England and Wales, Northern Ireland, and Scotland. This information relates to the England and Wales jurisdiction.

---

Sources of law

The principal sources of law in the England and Wales jurisdiction of the United Kingdom are:

- Primary legislation in the form of Acts of the United Kingdom Parliament, Acts of the National Assembly for Wales and Measures of the National Assembly for Wales
- European Union law
- Secondary (or subordinate legislation) in the form of statutory instruments made by the Sovereign, the United Kingdom government, the Welsh Assembly government or other authority. Some other subordinate legislation may be made as administrative orders.
- The common law as developed through judicial decisions

Types of legal instruments – description

Primary legislation, or Acts of Parliament, are made by the UK Parliament in London and may apply to all or any part of the United Kingdom. The National Assembly for Wales is able to pass Acts on 20 devolved areas listed in Schedule 7 to the Government of Wales Act 2006. Other primary legislation may be made by the Sovereign under the prerogative in various forms, such as Orders in Council, Proclamations, Royal Warrants, Royal Instructions, Regulations and Letters Patent.

Secondary legislation is made under powers conferred by or under statute of Her Majesty in Council or a Minister, department (Ministry), Welsh Ministers or other body or person. This is also called delegated or secondary legislation, and the statute conferring the power is referred to as the enabling or empowering or 'parent' Act. Secondary legislation may have various titles: such as, Orders in Council, Regulations or Rules, all of which may be referred to collectively as 'Statutory Instruments' or 'Statutory Rules'.

In July 1999, certain law-making powers were transferred from the UK Parliament to the National Assembly for Wales in Cardiff. The Assembly was given the power to make statutory instruments affecting Wales, but primary legislation on Welsh affairs continued to be made by the UK Parliament. Following the Government of Wales Act 2006, the Assembly was given the power to pass Measures (primary legislation) in respect of Welsh affairs for which the UK Parliament has approved legislative competence orders covering subjects set out in the Act. Measures must, however, must be submitted for approval by the Sovereign in Council before they can become law. The Assembly has responsibility for matters that include economic development, education, the environment, health, housing, tourism and transport; but does not have responsibility for civil or criminal law. Welsh legislation made by the Assembly and the Welsh Ministers (the Welsh Assembly government) is made in both the English and Welsh languages.

The power to make international treaties on behalf of the UK is vested in the Crown – i.e. the Sovereign under the Royal Prerogative, acting on the advice of the UK Government. The UK Parliament currently has no formal role in making treaties, but where a treaty requires a change in UK legislation or a grant of public money, Parliament will vote on that in the normal way. All EU treaties require legislation for their implementation in the UK and are therefore subject to parliamentary scrutiny. When the Constitutional Reform and Governance Act 2010 comes into force a treaty may not be ratified unless (a) a Minister of a Crown has in the first instance laid before Parliament a copy of the treaty, (b) the treaty has been published and (c) a period of 21 sitting days has expired without either House of Parliament having resolved that the treaty should not be ratified.

Hierarchy of norms

Where there are conflicts between the different sources of law, the principal forum for resolving them is the courts. Disputes about the interpretation of legislation may also be resolved by the courts. However, since there is no 'written constitution' in the UK, it is not possible to challenge an Act of Parliament in court on the basis that it is 'unconstitutional'. The constitutional doctrine of 'parliamentary sovereignty' holds that the UK Parliament is the supreme legislative authority – in the sense that it may make and repeal any law, and that no other body may repeal or question the validity of an Act of Parliament.

However, the doctrine of parliamentary sovereignty is qualified by the UK's membership of the European Union. By virtue of the European Communities Act 1972, European Union law forms part of the law of England and Wales (and Scotland and Northern Ireland). Domestic legislation must be interpreted so as to comply with EU law wherever possible.

The Human Rights Act 1998, which incorporated the European Convention on Human Rights into UK law, gives the courts another power with which to call Acts of Parliament into question. As far as possible, domestic legislation must be interpreted to be compatible with the rights in the Convention.

Decisions of the courts, and particularly of the appeal courts, play an important role in the development of the law. Not only do they provide authoritative rulings on the interpretation of legislation, but they also form the basis of the common law, which is derived from court decisions in previous cases (or case law).

As concerns which courts' decisions bind which other courts, the general principle is that a court will be bound by earlier decisions made by a higher court.

In relation to matters of European Union law, the European Court of Justice is the highest authority. The Law Lords within the House of Lords have acted as the Supreme Court of the United Kingdom but were replaced by the new Supreme Court, which came into being on 1st October 2009. The existing Law Lords became the first Justices of the Supreme Court, and the Senior Law Lord became the President.

Institutional framework

Institutions responsible for the adoption of legal rules and the decision-making process

Primary legislation is made by the UK Parliament in London. Before a proposal for legislation (known as a Bill) can become an Act of Parliament, it must be approved by both Houses of Parliament: the House of Commons and the House of Lords. The following stages take place in both Houses:

- First reading (formal introduction of the Bill without debate)
- Second reading (general debate)
- Committee stage (detailed examination, debate and amendments. In the House of Commons, this stage generally takes place in a public bill committee)
- Report stage (opportunity for further amendments)
- Third reading (final chance for debate; amendments are possible in the Lords).

Once a Bill has passed through both Houses, it is returned to the first House (where it started) for the second House's amendments to be considered.

Both Houses must agree on the final text. There may be several rounds of exchanges between the two Houses until agreement is reached on every word of the Bill. Once this happens, the Bill can be submitted for Royal Assent.

Primary legislation is also made by The National Assembly for Wales. Before a Bill can become an Act of the Assembly, it has to be considered and passed by the Assembly and given Royal Assent by the monarch. An Act of Assembly is a law, enforced in all areas of Wales, where it is applicable.

There is, generally, a 4-stage process for the consideration of a Government Bill in the Assembly as follows:

Stage 1: Consideration of the general principle of a Bill or Measure by a committee (or committees), and agreement of these general principles by the Assembly.

Stage 2: Detailed consideration, by a committee, of a Bill or Measure and any amendments proposed by Assembly Members.

Stage 3: Detailed consideration, by the Assembly, of the Bill or Measure and any amendments proposed by Assembly Members. The Presiding Officer decides which amendments will be considered by the Assembly.

Stage 4: A vote by the Assembly to pass the final text of the Bill or Measure.

When a Bill has passed through all its parliamentary stages in the UK Parliament or the Welsh Assembly, it is sent to the Sovereign for Royal Assent, after which it becomes an Act. Measures of the National Assembly for Wales must be submitted for approval by the Queen in Council.

Primary legislation can generally be amended or repealed only by new primary legislation. There are, however, exceptions under which certain amendments and repeals may be made by statutory instrument. This includes where they are implementing EU obligations or a piece of legislative reform that reduces or eliminates regulatory burdens. Such orders must, however, be approved by affirmative resolution of both Houses of Parliament before they are made.

Primary legislation comes into force in accordance with the commencement provisions included in the Act or Measure. The Act or Measure may specify a particular date for coming into force. This might be immediately on Royal Assent, on a specified date (generally at least two months after Royal Assent) or a date to be specified by a Minister or department by making a commencement order (statutory Instrument). Different dates may be specified for different provisions of an Act.

The coming into force date of any piece of secondary legislation will generally be specified in the instrument itself. Exceptionally, the commencement date may be made by publication of a notice in the official gazette (the London Gazette).

Legal databases

 Legislation.gov.uk, managed by The National Archives, is the official home of UK legislation.

Legislation.gov.uk provides access to UK legislation covering all jurisdictions (England, Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland). The site contains all legislation from 1988 to present day, most pre-1988 primary legislation in both original and revised versions, and a large selection of secondary legislation from 1948 onwards where this legislation is still in force.

---

The national language version of this page is maintained by the respective Member State. The translations have been done by the European Commission service. Possible changes introduced in the original by the competent national authority may not be yet reflected in the translations. The European Commission accepts no responsibility or liability whatsoever with regard to any information or data contained or referred to in this document. Please refer to the legal notice to see copyright rules for the Member State responsible for this page.

Last update: 05/06/2017

Member State law - Northern Ireland

---

This page provides you with information about law and legal databases in the United Kingdom, with particular reference to the Northern Ireland jurisdiction.

Sources of law

The principal sources of law in the Northern Ireland jurisdiction of the United Kingdom are:

- Primary legislation in the form of Acts of the United Kingdom Parliament and Acts of the Northern Ireland Assembly. Some primary legislation relating to Northern Ireland is also made by the Sovereign in Council as Orders in Council (statutory instruments)
- European Union law
- Secondary (or subordinate) legislation in the form of statutory instruments and statutory rules of Northern Ireland. Some other subordinate legislation may be made as administrative orders.
- The common law as developed through judicial decisions.

Types of legal instruments – description

Acts of Parliament, are made by the UK Parliament in London and may apply to all or any part of the United Kingdom. The UK Parliament has also approved the devolution of legislative powers to the devolved parliaments and assemblies, which can pass primary legislation covering a limited range of subjects and which apply within their own jurisdictions. Other primary legislation may be made by the Sovereign under the prerogative in various forms, such as Orders in Council, proclamations, royal warrants, royal instructions, regulations and letters patent.

Secondary legislation is made under powers conferred by or under statute of Her Majesty in Council or a Minister, department (Ministry), the Northern Ireland Executive, or other body or person. This is also called delegated or subordinate legislation, and the statute conferring the power is referred to as the enabling or empowering or 'parent' Act. Secondary legislation may have various titles, such as Orders in Council, regulations or rules, all of which may be referred to collectively as 'statutory Instruments' or 'statutory rules'.

In Northern Ireland, legislation includes Acts or statutes that may be Acts of the UK Parliament, the Northern Ireland Parliament (1921-1972) or the Northern Ireland Assembly in Belfast. At various times, devolved governments in Northern Ireland were suspended and much legislation was contained in 'Orders in Council', which technically are secondary legislation but are used as primary legislation. Legislation in Northern Ireland also includes statutory rules – secondary or subordinate legislation – made under the authority of an Act of the UK Parliament, Order in Council or Act of the Northern Ireland Assembly.

The power to make international treaties on behalf of the UK is vested in the Crown, i.e. the Sovereign under the Royal Prerogative, acting on the advice of the UK Government. The UK Parliament has no formal role in making treaties, but where a treaty requires a change in UK legislation or a grant of public money, Parliament will vote on it in the normal way. All EU treaties require legislation for their implementation in the UK and are therefore subject to parliamentary scrutiny. Sections 20-25 of the Constitutional Reform and Governance Act 2010 came into force on 11 November 2010 and requires a treaty may not be ratified unless (a) a Minister of a Crown has in the first instance laid before Parliament a copy of the treaty, (b) the treaty has been published and (c) a period of 21 sitting days has expired without either House of Parliament having resolved that the treaty should not be ratified.

Hierarchy of norms

Where there are conflicts between the different sources of law, the principal forum for resolving them is the courts. The courts may thus resolve disputes about the interpretation of legislation. However, since there is no 'written constitution' in the UK, it is not possible to challenge an Act of Parliament in court on the basis that it is 'unconstitutional'. The constitutional doctrine of 'parliamentary sovereignty' holds that the UK Parliament is the supreme legislative authority, in the sense that it may make and repeal any law, and that no other body may repeal or question the validity of an Act of Parliament.

However, the doctrine of parliamentary sovereignty is qualified by the UK's membership of the European Union. By virtue of the European Communities Act 1972, European Union law forms part of the law of Northern Ireland. Domestic legislation must be interpreted so as to comply with EU law wherever possible.

The Human Rights Act 1998, which incorporated the European Convention on Human Rights into UK law, gives the courts another power to call Acts of Parliament into question. As far as possible, domestic legislation must be interpreted so as to be compatible with Convention rights.

Decisions of the courts, and particularly of the appeal courts, play an important role in the development of the law. Not only do they provide authoritative rulings on the interpretation of legislation, but they also form the basis of the common law, which is derived from court decisions in previous cases (or case law). As a general principle, courts are bound by earlier decisions made by higher courts. In relation to matters of European Union Law, the European Court of Justice is the highest authority. The Supreme Court is the final court of appeal for all civil and criminal cases from Northern Ireland.

Institutional framework

Institutions responsible for the adoption of legal rules and the decision-making process

Before a proposal for primary legislation (known as a Bill) can become an Act of the UK Parliament, it must be approved by both Houses of Parliament in London: the House of Commons and the House of Lords. The following stages take place in both Houses:

- First reading (formal introduction of the Bill without debate)
- Second reading (general debate)

- Committee stage (detailed examination, debate and amendments. In the House of Commons this stage generally takes place in a Public Bill Committee.)
- Report stage (opportunity for further amendments)
- Third reading (final chance for debate; amendments are possible in the Lords).

When a Bill has passed through both Houses it is returned to the first House (where it started) for the second House's amendments to be considered.

Both Houses must agree on the final text. There may be several rounds of exchanges between the two Houses until agreement is reached on every word of the Bill. Once this happens the Bill can be submitted for Royal Assent.

In the Northern Ireland Assembly, a similar process (involving introduction of a Bill, consideration, debate and voting) occurs, although there is only a single Chamber within the devolved Assembly. Ministers, committees and individual members can initiate a Bill and present it to the Speaker of the Assembly for consideration by the Assembly. If the Speaker is content that the proposals are within the Assembly's competence, the Bill is then introduced and debated in the Chamber. It is then referred to the appropriate statutory committee for scrutiny. The committee reports back to the Assembly, allowing members to consider the detail of the Bill and to propose amendments. It is then considered further by the Assembly and a final vote is taken.

When a Bill has passed through all its parliamentary stages in the UK or the Northern Ireland Assembly, it is sent to the Sovereign for Royal Assent, after which it becomes an Act.

Primary legislation can generally be amended or repealed only by new primary legislation. There are, however, exceptions under which certain amendments and repeals may be made by statutory instrument – where they involve implementing EU obligations or a piece of legislative reform that reduces or eliminates regulatory burdens.

Primary legislation comes into force in accordance with the commencement provisions set out in the Act. The Act may specify a particular date for coming into force. This might be immediately on Royal Assent, on a specified date (generally at least two months after Royal Assent) or on a date to be specified by a Minister or department in a commencement order (statutory instrument). Different dates may be specified for different provisions within one Act.

The coming into force date for any piece of secondary legislation will generally be specified in the instrument itself. Exceptionally, the commencement date may be made by publication of a notice in the official gazettes (the London or Belfast Gazette).

Legal databases

A number of legal databases are available.

- The UK Legislation website provides the full text of all primary legislation as enacted by the UK Parliament, the Scottish Parliament, the Northern Ireland Assembly and the National Assembly for Wales, together with all secondary legislation applying to the UK as a whole or to parts of the UK. Access to the information is free of charge.
- Revised primary legislation covering all parts of the UK from 1235 to date can also be found in the UK Legislation website.

Related Links

UK legislation website

---

The national language version of this page is maintained by the respective Member State. The translations have been done by the European Commission service. Possible changes introduced in the original by the competent national authority may not be yet reflected in the translations. The European Commission accepts no responsibility or liability whatsoever with regard to any information or data contained or referred to in this document. Please refer to the legal notice to see copyright rules for the Member State responsible for this page.

Last update: 28/08/2018

Member State law - Scotland

This page provides you with information on law and legal databases in the United Kingdom, with particular reference to the Scotland jurisdiction.

---

Sources of law

The principal sources of law in the Scotland jurisdiction of the United Kingdom are:

- Primary Legislation in the form of Acts of the United Kingdom Parliament and Acts of the Scottish Parliament
- European Union law
- Secondary (or subordinate legislation) in the form of Statutory Instruments and Scottish Statutory Instruments. Some other subordinate legislation may be made as Administrative Orders
- The common law as developed through judicial decisions.

Types of legal instruments – description

Primary legislation, or Acts of Parliament, are made by the UK Parliament in London and may apply to all or any part of the United Kingdom. The UK Parliament has also approved the devolution of legislative powers to the devolved Parliaments and Assemblies, under which they can pass primary legislation covering a limited range of subjects, which will apply within their own jurisdictions. Other legislation may be made by the Sovereign under the prerogative in various forms, such as Orders in Council, proclamations, royal warrants, royal instructions, regulations and letters patent.

Secondary legislation is made under powers conferred by or under statute on Her Majesty in Council, Ministers, Departments (Ministries), the Scottish Ministers, or other body or person. This is also called delegated or secondary legislation, and the statute conferring the power is referred to as the enabling or empowering or 'parent' Act. Secondary legislation may have various titles (such as Orders in Council, Regulations or Rules), all of which may be referred to collectively as 'Statutory Instruments' or 'Scottish Statutory Instruments'.

The Scotland Act 1998 created and devolved power to the Scottish Parliament in Edinburgh. It restored to Scotland (following a referendum) the separate Parliament that had been lost at the time of the Union with England and Wales in 1707. However, as Scotland continues to be part of the UK, the UK Parliament is still able to legislate in certain areas. Primary legislation may be made by the Scottish Parliament in devolved subject areas (i.e. principally under the Scotland Acts of 1997, 2012 and 2016). These include: health; education; local government; social work; housing; planning; tourism and economic development; some aspects of transport; justice, including most aspects of private and criminal law; police and fire services; many aspects of the environment; agriculture and fisheries; sport and the arts and implementation of international obligations in devolved areas. The Scotland Acts of 2012 and 2016 extended these devolved powers into areas such as: certain aspects of taxation; employment support services; aspects of social security (including benefits for disabled people and carers); law on abortion; management of the Crown Estate; consumer advocacy and competition; energy (including licensing of onshore oil and gas and fuel poverty schemes); equalities (including quotas for gender equality on public sector boards); further aspects of transport (including policing of railways); and licensing and gaming machines. Scottish Statutory Instruments (SSIs) may also be made by the Scottish Ministers under powers delegated by Acts of the UK Parliament or Acts of the Scottish Parliament.

The power to make international treaties on behalf of the UK is vested in the Crown, i.e. the Sovereign under the Royal Prerogative, acting on the advice of the UK Government. The UK Parliament currently has no formal role in making treaties, but where a treaty requires a change in UK legislation or a grant of public money, Parliament will vote on that in the normal way. All EU treaties require legislation for their implementation in the UK and are therefore subject to parliamentary scrutiny. When the Constitutional Reform and Governance Act 2010 comes into force a treaty may not be ratified unless (a) a Minister of a Crown has in the first instance laid before Parliament a copy of the treaty, (b) the treaty has been published and (c) a period of 21 sitting days has expired without either House of Parliament having resolved that the treaty should not be ratified.

Hierarchy of norms

Where there are conflicts between the different sources of law, the principal forum for resolving them is the courts. Disputes about the interpretation of legislation may also be resolved by the courts. However, since there is no 'written constitution' in the UK, it is not possible to challenge an Act of Parliament in court on the basis that it is 'unconstitutional'. The constitutional doctrine of 'parliamentary sovereignty' holds that the UK Parliament is the supreme legislative authority, in the sense that it may make and repeal any law, and that no other body may repeal or question the validity of an Act of Parliament. Whilst therefore the UK Parliament retains authority to legislate on any issue, whether devolved or not, the UK Government has however committed to proceed in accordance with the (Sewel) convention that the UK Parliament would not normally legislate with regard to devolved matters except with the agreement of the devolved legislature.

However, the doctrine of parliamentary sovereignty is qualified by the UK's membership of the European Union. By virtue of the European Communities Act 1972, European Union Law forms part of the law of England and Wales (and Scotland and Northern Ireland). Domestic legislation must be interpreted so as to comply with EU law wherever possible.

The Human Rights Act 1998, which incorporated the European Convention on Human Rights into UK law, gives the courts another power to call Acts of Parliament into question. As far as possible, domestic legislation must be interpreted to be compatible with Convention rights.

Decisions of the courts, and particularly of the appeal courts, play an important role in the development of the law. Not only do they provide authoritative rulings on the interpretation of legislation, but they also form the basis of the common law, which is derived from court decisions in previous cases (or case law). In general, as to which courts' decisions bind which other courts, the general principle is that a court will be bound by earlier decisions made by a higher court. In relation to matters of European Union Law, the European Court of Justice is the highest authority. The High Court of Justiciary is the supreme criminal court in Scotland, while the Law Lords within the House of Lords have acted as the Supreme Court for Civil matters in Scotland. However, they were replaced by the Supreme Court, which came into being on 1st October 2009. The Law Lords became the first Justices of the Supreme Court, and the Senior Law Lord became the President.

Institutional framework

Institutions responsible for the adoption of legal rules and the decision-making process

Primary legislation is made by the UK Parliament in London. Before a proposal for legislation (known as a Bill) can become an Act of Parliament, it must be approved by both Houses of Parliament: the House of Commons and the House of Lords. The following stages take place in both Houses:

- First reading (formal introduction of the Bill without debate)
- Second reading (general debate)
- Committee stage (detailed examination, debate and amendments. In the House of Commons, this stage generally takes place in a Public Bill Committee.)
- Report stage (opportunity for further amendments)
- Third reading (final chance for debate; amendments are possible in the Lords)

When a Bill has passed through both Houses, it is returned to the first House (where it started) for the second House's amendments to be considered.

Both Houses must agree on the final text. There may be several rounds of exchanges between the two Houses until agreement is reached on every word of the Bill. Once this happens, the Bill can be submitted for Royal Assent.

In the Scottish Parliament, a similar process involving introduction of a Bill, consideration, debate and voting occurs, though there is only a single Chamber within the devolved Parliament. There are three stages:

- Stage 1: The appropriate parliamentary committee(s) takes evidence on the Bill and produces a report on the Bill's general principles. A meeting of the Parliament then considers the report and debates whether to agree to the Bill's general principles. If the Parliament agrees, the Bill goes on to Stage 2
- Stage 2: The bill is considered in detail by a committee or, occasionally, by a Committee of the Whole Parliament. Changes, known as amendments to the Bill, can be made at this stage.
- Stage 3: The Bill is again considered at a meeting of the Parliament. Further amendments can be made and the Parliament then debates and decides whether to pass the Bill in its final form.

When a Bill has passed through all its parliamentary stages in the UK or Scottish Parliaments, it is sent to the Sovereign for Royal Assent, after which it becomes an Act. In Scotland, there is a four week period during which it may be challenged by the Law Officers if they believe it falls outside the law-making powers of the Scottish Parliament.

Primary legislation can generally be amended or repealed only by new primary legislation. There are, however, exceptions under which certain amendments and repeals may be made by Statutory instrument – where these are implementing EU obligations, or a piece of legislative reform that reduces or eliminates regulatory burdens or failure to comply with the European Convention on Human Rights. Such Orders, however, require to be approved by affirmative resolution of both Houses of Parliament before they can be made.

Primary legislation comes into force in accordance with commencement provisions, which are included in the Act. The Act may specify a particular coming into force date. This might be immediately on Royal Assent, on a specified date (generally at least two months after Royal Assent) or a date to be specified by a Minister or Department by the making of a Commencement Order (Statutory Instrument). Different dates may be specified for different provisions within the Act.

The coming into force date for any piece of secondary legislation will generally be specified in the instrument itself. Exceptionally, the commencement date may be made by publication of a notice in the official gazettes (the London or Edinburgh Gazette).

Legal databases

A number of legal databases are available.

- The website of the Office of Public Sector Information \(OPSI\) provides the full text of all primary legislation as enacted by the UK Parliament, the Scottish Parliament, the Northern Ireland Assembly and the National Assembly for Wales, together with all secondary legislation applying to the UK as a whole or parts of the UK. Access to the information is free of charge.
- Revised primary legislation from 1235 to date covering all parts of the UK can be found in the UK Statute Law Database. Access to the database is free of charge.

Although all Scottish legislation is available on the OPSI website, all Scottish primary and secondary legislation enacted and made since devolution in 1999 is also available on the Office of the Queen's Printer for Scotland website. Access to the legislation is free of charge.

Legislation.gov.uk, incorporating both the OPSI and Statute Law Database websites and also replacing the legislation published on the Office of the Queen's Printer for Scotland website, is the official home of all UK Legislation

Related Links

Office of Public Sector Information \(OPSI\), Statute Law Database, legislation.gov.uk, Office of the Queen's Printer for Scotland

---

The national language version of this page is maintained by the respective Member State. The translations have been done by the European Commission service. Possible changes introduced in the original by the competent national authority may not be yet reflected in the translations. The European Commission accepts no responsibility or liability whatsoever with regard to any information or data contained or referred to in this document. Please refer to the legal notice to see copyright rules for the Member State responsible for this page.

Last update: 30/04/2019